The Drunkard's Soliloquy, or Alone with Death.

[From the British American Good Templar.]

On high howls the tempest around me;
All hope in the future hath fled,
Before me I see darkly brooding,
The ranks of despair on ahead.

ANTHON.

Alone with death! he stood, and gazed,
And who may tell the pain,
That rent the drunkard's heart athrough,
And crushed his throbbing brain!
As alone, beneath the pall of night,
His mournful memories wring,
Their flight, to boy-hood's happy days,
To manhood's mellow spring.

Alone with death! alone with her,
Whose smiles of love were given,
To 'lumine life, and light the road,
The thorny road to Heaven;
Alone with death! alone with her,
Whose smiles of love are fled;
Trod softly! lo! the drunkard speaks
His thoughts, beside the dead!

Dead in the flush of woman-hood!
But thirty summers fled!
So pure! and now, thou rest there,
A statue of the dead!
The light hath left thine hazel eye,
Thy blue cold lips apart;
Expreathe no more a smile, to cheer
The drunkard's riven heart.

Cold cold is now the heart that loved,
It broke amidst the tide,
That surging swept around thy path,
My beautiful! my bride!
Where! where is now thy merry laugh?
Thy cheeks deep ruddy shine?
Gone, woe is me, the hand that wrought
This evil deed, is mine!

I dare not kiss the form I lured
To degradation's brink!
Crush'd I not, sweet! thy gentle soul,
Beneath the curse of drink!
And now, thou liest silent there,
For me, all hope has fled;
Alone, I stand 'midst ruins near,
The kingdom of the dead!

For il slander flung his shafts as well,
The false unfeeling tongue,
Struck home, and wrought thy gentle soul,
Unutterable wrong,
Th' cold, insulting sneer of pride;
'The taunt with malice rife,
Wi h, did I curse! no more, no more;
I did not curse thee wife!

They say I struck thee! was it so?
No, no, they surely lied!
A blow! not so, thou didst not curse
Me, darling are you dead!
Did'st thou not bless, oh! speak! speak!
Near Death's eternal brink,
Appeals the living victim, to
The silent one of drink!

Ah me! thou can't not speak; dear heart!
Thy soul is well away,
From sin's foul blight, and cheerless night,
To Heaven's golden day!
Gone up! may hope to plead before,
Jehovah's jasper throne,
For him who bears his bitter curse,
The drunkard's cross alone.

Farewell, I cannot brook thy look!
It stabs, as doth a knife;
I may not, dare not, kneel to ask,
Forgiveness of thee wife!
Did I not leave thee for the cup?
The Harlot's Judas kiss!
Oh! Drink, thou fiend, for all I gave,
Lo! thou hast given this!

A Clouded Life.

A Sketch from Reality.

BY "SAD BUSTLINE."

"Are you disengaged, sir, that you can spare a few minutes for me—my business is very urgent!"

This was said to me by a lady who entered my office, when two gentlemen who had come to see me in regard to temperance, were taking their leave.

I saw by her very plain, and for the season, thin dress; that the lady was not one of the wealthy, and that sorrow had cast a shadow over features still beautiful, and though pressed for time, with many engagements on hand, requested her sit down and state her business.

"You do not recognize me Colonel!" she said, and she tried to smile.

"It seems as if I had seen you somewhere!" I answered, "but I surely can not recall you or the place!"

"Yet once we were very close friends—you seemed like a brother to me. Have you forgotten Carrie H——l?"

"Great Heavens! You—you are not little Carrie, so bright, so sunny, so full of cheer, to me, it cannot be! Yet now in your eye I see a glimmer of the old light, but it is only a glimmer! What has changed you so?"

"That which you are warning against with all your might. Rum! she replied.

"Why Carrie, surely you never drank strong drink. You were ever too good, too pure for that!"

"Never—never did I drink it. But—may I call you Edward as I once did?"

"Surely yes. I am the same now that I ever was in true brotherly feeling. Go on with your story."

"Yes, a fine, manly fellow he was."

"I married him and when I did so no one stood higher in the circle in which we both moved. He was so smart, so genial, that every one seemed to like him. Alas, some liked him too well, and they were the "last young men" of the place. They gave social parties, supper parties, they called them, and soon I found that much as he seemed to love me, he began to love them also. Late hours at first, and then whole nights of absence was the result, and when he came home it was in a state which brought blushes to my cheek and agony to my heart. Such agony, Edward, as I cannot describe.

"This has gone from worse to worse, I got him to move out of town to avoid temptation, but the taste for drink went with him and things went no better there. Soon he wasted all he had, and with two children on my hands I had to return where my needle could gain support for them. I am here now, living with those two children in a single room in the fourth story of a tenement house, barely keeping soul together."

"Where is he?"

"In the tombs, sentenced as a common drunkard this morning to ten days confinement."

"Ah! you come to me to try to get him out?"

"No, no, but to ask you to persuade Judge Dowling to keep him there the entire winter. It is all I ask. I will support my children if God keeps me alive. But I cannot support him, bear his abuse and wear out my wretched life to help the rumsellers to murder him."

Poor Carrie, my heart bled for her. I had known her when she was so bright and beautiful, so happy and free from care.

Now a wreck upon life's ocean she drifts hopelessly on, and the rum traffic has done it all. Oh, why will men aid in darkening homes, in breaking hearts, in blighting life's fairest flowers! Why will our apathetic people permit the cause to exist, aye to grow stronger and stronger every day, in a land which they could control to run MEN IN, in a single year, if they would unite.

What has the drunkard's wife to hope for or to pray for, while LEGALIZED temptation stands before her husband all the time?

They may pray for his speedy death, for his life is a curse to him and to her, while the cup of misery is ever at his lips.

Wake, oh ye people, wake to action in the temperance cause.

Thousands who weep to-day, will smile to-morrow, if you will work to little ends which shadow their weary lives. In the name of humanity, rise in your might, hurl up our Temperance orders until a mighty power for good, they renovate the whole land and drive the rum traffic from the face of the earth.

Turkish Laborers.

Labor is so far free in Turkey that a man can leave one employer for another at the end of his term, provided he owes the first nothing. If he is in debt, he becomes a serf, except his name; for being charged compound interest, the debt grows so quickly, it is soon more than he can ever hope to pay; and then he is liable to be transferred, with his debt, to any land owner thinking it worth while to pay off the original creditor. In these cases the unlucky debtor receives so much grain every year, sufficient if he has a family, to keep them in a state of semi-starvation. So long as the Turkish laborers can avoid debt, he is not so badly off. Naturally of penuriously economical habits, his wants are few. A two-penny earthenware pot is the only cooking utensil he needs to prepare his daily meal—a dish of beans or lentils, onions, salt, pickled cabbage, garlic, and pepper, eaten with bread or mixed grain. Salted cheese, olive oil, and hemp seed oil are occasionally indulge in; but meat, wine, and spirits are reserved for festival days. These come rather frequently with the Christians—almost at the rate of one a week, for counting Sundays, their idle days number one hundred in the year. Many live upon bread, making five or six pounds a day of that, sufficient to keep body and soul together.

Setting aside the victims of debt, the agricultural laborers are well clad, and there are but few of them who can not boast of the possession of a holiday suit, red leather shoes included—a suit they make last a lifetime. Their ordinary clothes are almost all made at home by their thrifty, hard-working wives; their working attire, consisting of cotton twist shirt and drawers, thick woolen socks, an outer garment of dark woolen stuff, red skull-cap, covered with a cotton turban, and sandals of raw buffalo hide; and in winter of an overcoat of sheepskin, with the wool inside. The women wear cotton garments, elaborately embroidered with origni, home-dyed wools, and for a headdress, a cotton 'kerchief, covering the neck and bosom.

The ordinary agricultural laborer lives in a one roomed house, built of sun-dried square bricks, upon a foundation of stone rubble, cemented with wetted clay and chopped straw. The rubble is carried about a foot above the surface of the ground, the walls being bound at intervals with strips of rough-hewn oak, beech or pine, running along their inner and outer edges, and fastened together by cross pieces nailed to them. In some parts the pent roof is covered with heavy slate or slabs, but light, kiln-baked tiles are oftener used.—The room itself is from eight to ten feet in height, and measures from twelve to fifteen feet square. It is provided with one or two very small unglazed windows, closing with sliding shutters, and an open fireplace with a flue. The whitewashed walls, some three feet thick, are studded with wooden pegs, and in their recesses usually two or more shelves are fitted, while another narrow shelf runs all around the room near the ceiling. Such a house will cost $22. Prosperous laborers will have two or more rooms, besides a stable and out-houses.

In the hilly districts of Macedonia, where stone and lime are easily procured, substantially built houses of two or three rooms are common enough; but whether the house be of stone or of clay, it is equally destitute of furniture within—chairs, tables and bedsteads being articles unknown, or, at any rate, undesired. A few straw-stuffed cushions, or even a piece or two of rush matting, placed upon the hard clay floor, supplies all the sitting or sleeping accommodations the occupants require. In fact, unless their domicile is provided with a sort of verandah, they prefer to take their rest, in summer at least, in the open air. In any case, they lie down in their clothing, covering themselves with a blanket, if they have it; if not an overcoat serves the purpose.—Chamber's Journal.

Rev. Dr. Tyng is acting as "the spiritual adviser" of the murderer Foster, in the city of New York. Foster was once a member of the Doctor's Sabbath School, and belongs to a much respected family in St. George's Church. In a card to the public, the Doctor says: He was always a boy of quiet temper and good behaviour, until maddened by drink, in a few later years." And this is the history of crime and criminal law generally in this country. The law licenses men to make other men, "maddened by drink," and then hangs the man who, unintentionally perhaps, kills another, when so maddened! The venerable Dr. Tyng has been a faithful preacher and pastor during the many long years of his ministry, and we could wish that now, as that ministry is drawing to a close, he would crown his labors for God and humanity by such an appeal as he can base upon this incident, to good men in the church, to unite in an earnest effort to destroy the traffic without which murders and most kinds of crime would be unknown.—Temperance Patriot.

COLOR OF HORSES.—A writer, signing himself 'Neterinarian,' in the Country Gentleman, makes some statements which we reproduce here for the consideration of horsemen. He says, "the dark chesnut, dark brown, and blood bay are more exempt from diseases than any other color, if we except the dun, which is much objected to. Dappled or dark greys are subject to cancerous-looking warts. Black horses are more subject to affections of the eyes than any other color; faulty on foot, constitution not vigorous. As a rule, the sorrels are the most skittish, vicious and baulky. For intelligence, beauty and general usefulness, the three colors left named will generally fill the bill.

An unlicensed liquor seller in Montville has been fined $20.

Matrimonial.

The recent genial, sunshiny days have had an effect upon the genus homo similar to that produced upon the feathered tribes—the "warbling songsters"—by the return of the balmy springtime; i. e., the approach of warm weather warms the birds that the season is approaching when they should pair off and go to housekeeping. And the long list of marriages observable in our daily papers of late would seem to indicate a similar inclination upon the part of man and womankind. The latter, however, unlike the birds, do not seem content to enter the blissful state in so quiet a manner; do not relish a quiet, old-fashioned wedding, where after the important ceremony which binds two souls together has been performed, mirth and jollity, fun and frolic assume and supercede, happy faces and happier hearts prevail, but must needs resort to some strange expedient—something "stunning" or brilliant—to lend eclat to their entre into the connubial state.

Not many months ago a betrothed pair conceived a striking plan—something that would form a subject for discourse among their friends for all time to come. They gathered together all their bridal paraphernalia (clergyman, bridesmaids, groomsmen included), placed them upon a special railway train, and after travelling about fifty or sixty miles, were tied in the holy bonds of wedlock while the cars were in motion. Congratulations over, "down brooks" was whistled, the train stopped, and the bridal party were led to a sumptuous repast spread at a first-class country-town hotel. This plan is a little expensive, of course, but so novel.

Another plan, much in verse on account of its romance, but a somewhat worn out one, is for a fair Juliet to wait at her window, ere the "wee sma' hours" have commenced to chime, while her lover places a ladder, down which she climbs, stray moonbeams keeping watch the while, and, ere the parents are aware of the loss of a daughter, the twain have been made one. We recommend this method as being cheap though not always safe.

Another mode—a very clerical one—was recently adopted by a party contemplating matrimony, determined to outdo all predecessors in the way of things romantic, they concluded to celebrate their nuptials far above old mother Earth, up among the clouds, where the fleecy vapors would lend a charm superb to so important an occasion, where the air, pure as crystal and free from storms, would seem but a reflex of the life in store for them. In fact, they went up in a balloon, and were married while "skimming the clouds." This occurred in Paris, of course, and the mode cannot be recommended in all cases, on account of the inconvenience of procuring the means of transportation.

The astonishingly romantic idea of being married aeaders originated with a couple "out West" (that means Cincinnati), who procured a small boat, and were married in the middle of the Ohio river, on the dividing line between Kentucky and Ohio. They were somewhat taken aback on being told, afterward, that their marriage was void. However, it was "fixed up" all right, subsequently.

To cap all these, however, Chicago had the crowning glory of seeing a couple married on the ice on skates, at one of the rinks last winter—a fitting place, say we, for wedding is but a slippery business at best.

But 'twas ever thus. The vagaries of Cupid are multiform, and will be so, we presume, to the end of time. We seek to impose no restraint upon our young readers who contemplate embarking upon the tide of matrimony; but we do think a quiet old-time wedding, at home among well remembered friends and loving kin-folk, is far preferable to the modern, new fangled, romantic way of doing things.

Hymn in a Gambling Room.

A Hong Kong correspondent of the Boston News, tells an interesting incident. He had been entrusted with packages for a young man from his friends in the United States, and after inquiry learned that he might probably be found in a gambling-house. He went thither, but not seeing him, determined to wait in the expectation that he might come in. The place was a bedlam of noises; men getting angry over their cards, and frequently coming to blows. Near him sat two men—one young, the other forty-five years of age. They were hosting and drinking in a terrible way, the elder one giving utterance continually to the foulest profanity. The games had been finished, the young man losing each time. The third game, with fresh bottles of brandy, had just begun, and the young man sat lazily back in his chair while the elder shuffled the cards. The man was a long time dealing the cards, and the young man looking carelessly about the room, began to hum a tune. He began to sing the beautiful lines of Phobe Cary:—

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and over.
I'm nearer to my father's house
Than I've ever been before.

'Nearer the bound of life,
When we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving my cross,
Nearer wearing my crown."

At first, says the writer, these words in such a vain place, made me shudder. A Sabbath School hymn in a gambling hell! But while the young man sang, the elder stopped dealing the cards, stared at the singer a moment, and throwing the cards on the floor exclaimed,—

"Harry, where did you learn that tune?"

"What tune?"

"Why, the one you've been singing."

The young man said he did not know what he had been singing; when the elder repeated the words with tears in his eyes, and the young man said he had learned them in a Sunday School in America.

"Come," said the elder, getting up, "come, here's what I've won from you go and use it for some good purpose; as for me, as God sees me, I have played my last game and drank my last bottle. I have misled you, Harry, and I am sorry. Give me your hand, my boy, and say for old America's sake, if no other, you will quit that infernal business."

The writer saw these two men leave the gambling-house together, and walked away arm in arm.

Who was it that said wives are not helpers! A man in the western part of New York State had a wife. They did not agree exactly like little white mice, but that wasn't much. Not long ago this husband got tired of matrimony and cast about for a means of getting a rest. Now they don't have the modern improvements for suicide out where he lived, and he could find no puddle of water big enough for a respectable drowned, and finally concluded to try it by holding his head in a bucket full of the article. He couldn't make much headway at it, and so his wife assisted by sitting on his neck until there was no occasion for a divorce.

It is worthy of remark that almanacs in use six years ago, (1865) correspond exactly with those of this year in the dates of the month and days of the week.

There is no note in the harp of Gabriel more welcome to Jehovah than the cry of a penitent for mercy, or the supplication of a child of grace.

The good things of the saints are not dispensed out of the basket of common providence, but out of the ark of the covenant.

SILVER MINE ON LAKE SUPERIOR.—We learn that great excitement exists in the Lake Superior silver mining district. The steamer Chicora, on her last trip from Thunder Bay, brought down $15,000 worth of ore, which was obtained from Silver Islet, Thunder Bay. One large piece alone was valued at $4,000. The mining company have at present 40 men employed at the Islet, and hoping in projection to take in four acres around the edge, which is now covered by the waters of the lake.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—Always treat a lady with politeness. Such is due to her sex—no matter, though, for a time, you may seem to be a gentleman, and therefore ill at ease—don't fail to perform the act of grace. Duty is duty whether duty is success or not.—To a lady, use kind words. They are cheaper and aught to mean more than others. You have, or once had, a mother; your wife or may not have, or have had a sister. It is one and the same. The sex merits politeness. It is better by it. The giver is better, even under the circumstances just stated. It is an investment that always pays.

—Father Connolly, of St. Bridget's church, Jersey City, is a practical temperance man. In a recent sermon he said:—"I want you all to understand that the liquor stores in the neighborhood must be closed on Sunday. A class of men who seem to have no souls keep their liquor shops open on this holy day in order to take advantage of the less scrupulous hours of the poor, and reap fortunes from their ruin. Such men would almost go down to the lower regions to make money. I saw enough in Wayne street to justify these remarks. Liquor stores were open as usual, and filled with poor men who should have been at home among their families. Remember, when I next speak on this subject it may not be from the altar."

THE GERMAN DEAD IN THE WAR.—A traveller who has lately visited the battle fields of Worth and Gravelotte writes to the Pall Mall Gazette to say that in his opinion the carnage on those occasions has been much underrated in England, and perhaps intentionally misrepresented in Germany. The field of Gravelotte occupies from five to six English miles in length. The trenches, or rather trenches, are scattered over all this extent; perhaps fifty to one grave may be a fair estimate. I have, however, immediately facing the French right wing at St. Private, there are interred 2,500 corpses, and of those only 25 French. Multiply 2,500 by 10, and one may arrive at an approximately correct account of the German dead at Gravelotte alone. The statistics are from Prussian authority, or rather from information given by Prussian soldiers in charge of the graves. Possibly, a quarter of a million lives on all sides from sword, disease and various causes were sacrificed in the late war.

DIGNITY OF LABOR.—It would seem that employment, from the morning of creation when God himself worked and rested, and when Adam was commanded to till the soil and subdue the animals, implies peculiar dignity and honor. The maker of the worlds blessed labor. It is Christ-like, it is God-like to work. No system of education is complete that does not harden the hand and toughen the muscle, while it develops the intellect and enlarges the heart. The religion that shows nothing but pale cheeks and lily-white fingers is not the religion of the Bible. Highways and hedges are better sanctuaries for acceptable service, than studies, and closets and cells. Scars and not on the hands are more honorable than rings and gloves. Bronze out of the sunbeams is more beautiful on the face than rouge out of the shops. Only a worker attains the true symmetry, strength, and glory of manhood or womanhood. Genius itself falters in a conflict with labor. Industry has the long end of the lever that moves the public opinions, parties congresses and the thrones. It men with brown faces and sinewy arms that built the pyramids on Egypt's plains, reared the temple on Mount Moriah, walled the Holy City with adamant, circled an Asiatic Empire with impenetrable granite, put arm and arm the old and new worlds a-whispering mother and daughter, spanned the American continent with a thoroughfare of iron from sea to sea, cut a canal for steamers in forty months across the desert sands where the Israelites wandered for forty years, it is men with sunburnt features and nerves of steel that to-day whiten he world's wide waters with the sails of commerce, navigate all rivers, explore all lands, and subdue the earth as God at first at first commanded an idle man, however white and soft, and smart, is not God's man.—Workday Christianity, by Alexander Clark.

A man named Campbell has been brutally murdered in the Township of Missouri.—One Davis, a neighbour, is under arrest as the murder, but he protest his innocence. The two murderers entered the house while the man and family were asleep, and seizing him, demanded his money. A tussle for life at once began. A very powerful man, it took the united exertions of both robbers to hold the justly excited victim. Disengaging his throat from their grasp he shouted murder, and cried to his wife to get him the axe. This natural thought, as it is proved, unfortunate request no doubt cost Campbell his life, for it was by this weapon that he was killed. By this time all four were struggling in the middle of the room, almost in darkness, the two children crying with terror. One of the robbers snatches the axe from the hand of Mrs. Campbell, and struggling with her husband for its possession inflicted a severe wound on Campbell's wrist. A most horrible scene then ensued. The robber holding the axe made frantic efforts to get a stroke at Campbell, who called to his wife to get the hatchet-knife. This in turn was snatched from her hand and and the couple were then defenseless. The villain then used the axe with murderous force, of which some idea could be formed from the sickening spectacle presented by the murdered man. When he was first seen after the committal of the deed the whole of his face was beaten completely out of all resemblance to that of a human being and the back of his head laid open in two or three places by several strokes of the axe. There were four wounds with the edge of the axe and seven with its back. The murderous villan missed his mark and the axe descended past his victim into the boarding of the room. So heavy was the blow that one of the planks was nearly cut in two, and the extent of the incision showed the fearful force with which other blows were struck.

PETERBOROUGH, JULY 20, 1871.

Editorial Items.

Messrs. Richards and Cameron have changed offices in the Combination.

The Picton Gazette says the crops this year in Prince Edward County will be double that of last year.

A fire alarm telegraph has been added to the Toronto fire department at a cost of $10,000.

It is said there are 200,000 natives of Ireland in New York City besides children born of Irish parents, who are called American citizens.

Several capitalists are said to be desirous of connecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway with the Watertown Railway.

THAT excellent periodial the New Dominion Monthly, for August has been received. This number contains the usual amount of interesting matter.

The Bradford Grammar School building was consumed by fire on Thursday morning last, supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

PERSONAL:—The friends of Mr. D. G. Hatton will be pleased to learn that he has returned to Peterboro, and has opened a Law Office in Scott's block. See his Card in to-days Examiner.

Pure Gold is the title of an excellent paper just issued in Toronto. It is a first-class family paper and deserves encouragement, which we trust it will get abundantly,

DEATH BY APOPLEXY:—We regret to learn that Mr. John Henderson, of Ashburnham, lately overseeing some government works in the north part of this County, died suddenly of apoplexy on Tuesday evening. His remains arrived here today by the Ogemah and stage. He was well, and walking around a few minutes before his death.

MELANCHOLY CASE OF DROWNING: We regret to learn that Dr. Steele, of Lakefield, was accidentally upset out of his canoe on Clear Lake, on Monday, and drowned. He had just joined a pleasure party encamped on Sandy Point, and had gone out in his canoe to fish. A party being near by in a row-boat forgetting him for a moment they looked around to see where he was, when they saw his canoe upset, and he had sunk to rise no more alive. The Dr. was a young man esteemed by all who knew him. His relatives reside near Toronto.

THE Midland Railway has changed hands; the New Board consists of President D'Arcy Boulton; Vice-President Mr. Adolphe Hugel, New York; Directors Hon. Wm. Cayley, Auditor General of Ontario, Mr. A. T. Williams, Port Hope, and Mr. Jas. McLennan, Barrister, Toronto.

The Times learns that the extension will be pushed forward rapidly, and a line of steamers are contemplated to connect the road on Georgian Bay with Chicago, and another from Port Hope to Oswego. If so, Port Hope is destined to move onward and upward in a few years. The new company is represented very strong in capital, and money will enable them to do almost anything they please in this world.

Americans control the Cobourg line of Railway, and rumour has it that Americans have purchased the Midland Railway with a view to extension westward to connect with the Northern Pacific Railway.

THE Oshawa Reformer says:—A man named Alexander entered Quigley's Hotel on Thursday night by a window, and was making himself at home in a room occupied by some boarders. He was requested to leave but refused, and before doing so, stabbed a man named Jackson two or three times in the leg with a knife.

The Reformer also says:—The hay of that section of county is nearly all gathered in, and turns out better than expected. The fall wheat crops is good, and spring crops in general looking well.

A COLD WINTER PREDICTED:—A man from Otonabee predicts that the approaching winter will be unusually severe. The grounds of his prognostications being the unusual number of blankets stored by somewhere northwards. He says that when animals of sagacious instinct lay by large stores in their hollow log houses, it is indicative of a long and severe season. We hope his prophesying may come to naught, unless the government also send a few blankets southward as well to the North.

EXAMINATION OF TEACHERS.—The first examination of candidates for certificates to teach under the New Law, commenced here on Tuesday, at 9 o'clock. Twenty-five candidates filed appearance, of whom twenty-four were applicants for third class certificates and one for a second class certificate. Messrs. Brown and Stratton were the Examiners present. Mr. Dixon had not returned as was expected, and Mr. Moore had gone to rusticate, we have been told, regardless of the consequence to teachers and trustees generally, so much was he concerned about the Educational interests of this County, or of this County in particular. Teachers, however, or trustees, need not be alarmed. The Review is no authority on Educational matters. The examinations are being conducted according to Law. Every certificate issued will be Legal—anything written to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Mr. Stratton is a legally qualified Examiner. He has no less than two Certificates to that effect, granted under the New Law, too, sent him from the Educational Department Toronto, without begging and without Memorials from the County Council. Will this quiet the nerves of the philosophist, the Review? Now if she will lift her nose out of the Gas Works wipe her spectacles and properly adjust them on her Nasal Organ—we will guarantee to let her get a peep at those Certificates, so that her repose may not any longer be disturbed over this matter; and after the peep, if she does not squelch her eye-glasses, why then she must just keep them to look into Gas Posts.

Early Closing.

We are glad to see the hearty manner in which the Dry Goods Merchants have entered into the Early Closing Movement. The clerks owe them a debt of gratitude and faithfulness for the interest manifested in their behalf. To-day Messrs. Kidd and Menzies, also, agree to join the Dry Goods men; and thus another class of long-hours men will be relieved for a few hours every Thursday. The Grocery stores have not yet signified their willingness to make the afternoon of Thursday a general holiday, but we trust that ere long they too will show that health, happiness and a little pleasure are as necessary as money to temporal well-being. It is poor comfort to know that your increased fortune is accompanied by the seeds of death. And that when a merchant has attained to affluence he has not the health to enjoy the fruits of his earnest industry. Even in the Dollar and Cent view of this early closing movement there is nothing to fear, when it is known that all the shops are closed on a certain afternoon, purchasers will remain at home on that afternoon, and attend either the day before or the day after. Merchants will not lose a dollar in the year by the closing, so long as it is general.

The Grocery and Liquor stores would do well to follow suit at once. The same line of reason is applicable to them, and the results will be the same. Tea, Sugar and other articles will be purchased the day before or the day after, and instead of a bottle daily, of course those who will have liquor may lay in two bottles instead of one, and we are sure they will take the advantage of the hint, or any other hint to that effect.

How is the day to be spent? This is an important question to young men. If spent as too many holidays are, in dissipation, the result is not hard to predict; but if spent in healthful exercises, rowing, walking, useful and cheerful amusement, improving the mind and invigorating the body, they will have reason to be thankful for the boon. But if spent in scenes of riot and drunkenness, or licentiousness, the good intended will become an evil of enormous magnitude. The directors of the Mechanics Institute have, in their liberality, provided an excellent means for improving the mind, so that on unfavorable evenings for out-door exercise young men could spend a few hours in the rooms to great advantage. Let us, therefore, hope that they will not be slow to avail themselves of the books, papers and periodicals in the reading rooms, and thus while amusing themselves, be improving themselves.

We would again urge on the Grocery and Liquor Merchants to join the early closing movements and show that they are just as liberal, just as kind and as thoughtful as other men, and that they value health and consequent happiness as much as they do money.

CHEESE FACTORY.—We had the pleasure of visiting the new Cheese Factory on the River Road, Otonabee, on Friday evening last. The building is a frame one, and from the weight of cheese already heaped up in it, is legging to show signs of feebleness. Cheese making operation commenced in June of the present year. Owing to the novelty of a Cheese manufacturing Company in that part of the country, farmers were slow to encourage it. Twenty nine, however, have agreed to give the thing a trial, and the result is looked for with a great deal of certainty. About 3500lbs of milk, the produce of 170 to 180 cows are daily received at the Factory. From this at least 350 lbs. of good cheese are daily made, and the factory building literally groans under the pressure of what is already made. One farmer, who supplied the milk of eight cows during the month of June, averaged 26 gallons daily, which at 8 cents per gallon averaged $2 08 daily This for the month would be $64.68, or an average per cow of $7.70, which for the season would not be less than $40 per head. The cheese made daily, say 350 lbs at 10 cents, would be worth $35.00, or about $910.00 for the month. By this calculation the quantity per head monthly would be worth $5.40 to $5.50, or for the season about $30.00 worth of cheese This taking the good and poor cows together, in a very fair average, and if, as farmers tell us, the produce on an average of butter for the year does not exceed one tub of 100 lbs. to 120lbs., and fixing the price at 20 cents, there is an advantage in favor of manufacturing into cheese of about $10.00 to 12.00 per head. The managers of the union cheese manufacturing company were fortunate in obtaining the service of Mr. Lowes, a first class cheese maker, we understand, as already there is keen demand for his make. If this season's work proves successful, the work next year will be on a more extensive scale.

THE COST OF A NEW BRIDGE.—Mr. Stevenson, who visited Brantford lately for the purpose of investigating the Water Works system of that Town, informed the Council on Monday evening, that he had also examined a neat Iron Bridge lately erected in that place. The whole length of the bridge is 225 feet. It consists of two spans—and cost, piers and all $18,000. Mr. Stevenson understood that the iron cost $6,500. The breadth of the Otonabee where the bridge was is about 250 feet.—The piers are already built and the approaches good, so that the iron is all that is required. The difference in length of span is about 17 feet at most, which of course would entail an additional cost, perhaps a little more than in proportion to the lengths. But supposing the Brantford bridge to cost for iron $6,500, ours would not cost more than $8,000, or about that sum. The County has agreed to pay one half or say $4,000. The Town considers her share as 2-3, or say $3,200. There is then the sum of $800 to contend about — The committee on the Mud Lake and Pigeon Creek bridges cost $594, or a sum nearly equal to this difference. If the two committees be but moderate in their Mileage the battle between the Town and County Councils need not be a long one, nor yet very bitter. The whole matter narrows itself down to a question of less than $200. None of the committee come from Minden, Snowdon or Dysart. There need be more than two or three meetings, altogether—and in all probability this Mileage question can be managed moderately in the future. The bridge need not therefore be delayed on account of such a small difference.

Another Fire.

On Saturday morning about 12 to 1 o'clock another fire occurred in our good Town, which destroyed over $12,000 worth of valuable property. It originated in the work-shop of Mr. Kane, Cabinet maker, on Hunter Street. It appears that Mr. Kane had been doing some fixing for Mr. Faucher, and had left the shop for that purpose, leaving the shop as he imagined all right. In a few minutes, however, the cry of fire was heard, when it was found that his shop was on fire; but owing to the difficulty of procuring water, or pails at once, it got such headway that it was impossible to save it, or anything in it. Mr. Tanner's Cabinet shop, which was contiguous, was soon ignited also, and the stables and sheds at Mr. John Sullivan's Hotel.—It then became evident that the main buildings would suffer severely, if not be entirely destroyed.

When the fire burst through Mr. Tanner's shop and dwelling, the flames were so strong and the wind so furious that it became impossible to get within reach of either Tanner's or Kane's shops. The streets, too, were one sheet of cinders everywhere in the vicinity, and from the quantity passing over the other buildings fears were entertained of the extension of the work of devastation. At this period, too, Mr. Redmonds' and Messrs. Cobb's & Falls Blacksmith shops were in great danger. The firemen for a few minutes turned their attention to them, and thus timely helped to prevent the extension in that direction. All this time a host of willing fellows with pails were at work on every house top, and in the rear of Mr. Kingan's Hardware store and the adjoining buildings, and did good service in confining the fiery elements. The firemen worked with a right good will, doing all in their power, but notwithstanding, their efforts were unavailing to save the main buildings. The supports of the frame walls of Mr. Tanner's building were wood, and as soon as they were consumed the whole mass fell in with a crash, leaving the whole of his fine building a mass of brick and rubbish. The part occupied by Mr. Kane, and owned by Sheriff Hall, also fell with it.

Mr. Tanner is a very heavy loser. His fine building, consisting of a three story shop and dwelling house attached, his work shop and horse power and tools, and a large quantity of stock are all destroyed. The furniture in the shop was removed, but considerably damaged. His loss will be at least $8,000, on which he has a partial insurance on the buildings of $1,000, and on the furniture $1,000.

Mr. Kane's loss consists of damage done to furniture, his work shop, tools and material, he has an insurance of $2,000 on the shop and material. The furniture was nearly all saved.

Sheriff Hall owned the building occupied by Mr. Kane, and also by Mr. John Sullivan, as a Hotel; both are considerably damaged, but supposed to be about covered by an insurance of $4,000.

Mr. Sullivan, however, is a heavy loser; all his furniture, beds, bedding, everything in the house were removed and were damaged much in doing so. We are sorry to learn that Mr. Sullivan had not a cent of insurance on his furniture. He had also built the sheds and stables at his own cost, and they are a complete loss. Mr. Sullivan's loss will be about $800

Mr. Sproule's Photograph Gallery was also destroyed, and one or two of his Cameras. His loss will be at least $ —. No insurance.

Mrs O'Shea and Mr. Leake have both suffered loss by removal of stuff and burning of cordwood, but not seriously.

Mr. Kingan's property was in great danger for a while but fortunately suffered no damage.

Messrs. A. W. Kempt, Dr. Taylor, and others in the rear of the property have been partial sufferers from destruction of fences, &c., to prevent extension of the fire.

Hentherns Livery Stables were also threatened a little, but there was no serious cause for alarm in that direction. A small force pump in his stable did good service in keeping Redmond's and Cobb & Falls' blacksmith shops wet.

A Steam Fire Engine at Last.

Our readers will see that at last the Town Council have agreed to get a Steam Fire Engine. This we urged on them a year ago when we were suffering from fires before, but then nothing but Water Works at an expense of not less than $70,000 would please a few, and thus neither Engine nor Water Works were provided.—There is not a doubt but at the last two fires property worth more than two fire engines could have been saved if the fire company had had a Steam Engine. They worked with unwonted energy, but to no purpose, almost. The engine was out of repair, and men cannot be found to work more than a few minutes at a time; and the helplessness of one engine at such fires has long since been apparent, and just through the opposition of the Review and one or two who encouraged its teachings, the Town has lost not less than $20,000 worth of property that could have been and would have been saved if a proper engine had been in the hands of the firemen and citizens. It is good that at last reasonable counsel has prevailed, and the Town is to have a Steam Engine ere long.

WATER WORKS.

We are also to have Water Works. There should be provisions for a water supply when and where needed, but the extreme folly of going more than a mile out of town for water when there is abundance of just as good a quality just at hand, we trust will not be entertained. To bring water from Blyth's Mills will cost over $19,000 to 15,000 extra for the main pipe alone. According to the Brantford system, $2,000 or $3,000 more would provide a sufficient supply for the whole Town. We understand that the representatives of the Dixon Estate are ready to give any amount of water required, and then with a reservoir on the Court House hill, an abundant supply could be always certain, and with a Steam Fire Engine and othe. appliances, fire would be easily mastered. The Town Fathers should, however, take a lesson from the Gas Works, and the rate at which they are extended according to contract, and thus keep any other contracts out of the hands of such men. It is now nearly two years since that Company was formed, and what part of the Town is yet lighted by the Company? Just from Turver's to Mitchell's Corner—one block. The lamp posts put up in places at a cost of $20 apiece are positively broken down in some places, and the whole town foots the bill of broken post, contracts, minus light, and little hope of light either temporal or spiritual for some time to come. By all means keep the Gas Company out of the Water Works Company, or the lesser lights will be eclipsed by the Gas lights.

Town Council.

SPECIAL MEETING.

The Council met on Monday evening in Session, Mr. Stevenson presiding.

Present, Messrs. Doherty, Stevenson, Toole, O'Beirne, English, Lundy, Rutherford, Smith, Heathorn and Edmison.

The Chairman said the object of the meeting was to lay before the Council the Report of the Deputation to Brantford in connection with the Water Works, and especially in view of the late alarming fires in the Town. He then read the report and submitted a copy of the first annual report of the Brantford Water Works company of the 21st June last. Both reports were received.

On motion of Mr. English, Col. Poole was heard in reference to the fire engine, and the necessity of some more efficient means of extinguishing fires—also Mr. Stapleton to the same effect.

Moved by Mr. English, seconded by Mr. O'Beirne, That the fire committee be instructed and empowered to enter into negotiations at once for the purchase of a Steam Fire Engine and hose.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. English, seconded by Mr. Lundy, that the Chief Engineer and assistant Engineer, have a voice in all matters concerning the purchase of the Steam Fire Engine and appliances.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Doherty, seconded by Mr. Heathorn, That four square boxes be put down on a level with the creek at Douglas's bridge, Doherty's bridge, Helm's bridge, and Eugl sh's, and at any other place they may think necessary according to the report of the Street and Bridge Committee.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, That the report of the delegation sent to Brantford to examine the Aolly system of Water Works be received and referred to the Fire Committee, and that they be requested to consider the whole question of Water Works, and report to this Council at their earliest convenience, and that the thanks of this Council be tendered to the delegation for their very instructive report.

Moved by Mr. Smith seconded by Mr. O'Beirne, That this Council delares unanimously in favor of Water Works, and that Messrs. Stevenson, O'Beirne, English Edmison, Lundy, and the mover, be a committee to negotiate with any person or persons with a view to procure the establishment of Water Works for the Town, and to procure proposals therefore and report as soon as possible.

Accounts from R. Romaine and Geo. Stethem were referred to the Finance Committee.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, That the communication of the County Council in reference to the construction of a permanent bridge across the Otonabee River be referred to the special committee appointed to act in co operation with the committee of the County Council in the construction of a temporary bridge, and that they be requested to confer with the village of Ashburnham with a view of ascertaining whether that Municipality would contribute any portion of the help expected by the County Council from the Town, and they be also authorized to confer with the executors of the Dickson estate, with a view of ascertaining the best terms on which they would construct a substantial bridge over their dam and maintain the same, say for 20 years; and also that they ascertain what portion, if any, the Municipality of Ashburnham would be willing to contribute towards the purchase and maintaining of a Steam Fire Engine, and report at next meeting of Council.—Carried.—The Council adjourned.

Lakefield, July 26th, 1871

A sad accident occurred about four and one half miles from Young's Point, at a place better known as Sandy Point, causing the death of a very promising young man of this place, Dr. Steele. Deceased left here on Tuesday morning to join a party encamped on the Point. After arriving he partook of some refreshment, and a short time after went out fishing in a small canoe, one of the party following in a boat about four hundred yards behind.

An inquest was held from which it appears both parties were still fishing, the party in the boat setting with his back towards deceased. On calling to him if he had caught any fish, deceased gave no reply; he then rowed towards the place deceased was supposed to be but was surprised to find his hat in the water and boat bottom upwards, about twenty feet from the shore and about eight feet of water; the person in the boat made every effort in his power to recover the body, but of no avail; it was not found until next morning. The most singular part is, that deceased, if he upset accidentally, gave no alarm, made no struggling in the water that could be heard at the distance of four hundred yards on a calm day, which leads many to suppose he must have taken a fit, as he was subject to attacks in the head. —Com.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR is the title of a New Monthly Magazine published in New York, in the interest of the Episcopal Church. If the introduction be taken as a criterion of what the Christian Year shall be, we predict for it a large circulation. The first number contains 112 pages of reading matter, the greater part of which is instruction to every, but more especially so to members of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Kidd will supply the Christian Year to subscribers.

The Globe says it would appear that Col. Gray is in great expectations of shortly entering upon his reward, by receiving a good comfortable office, where neither mileage returns shall betray nor Parliamentary committees be again called upon to investigate the conduct of an erring brother. A law clerkship is to be placed at the disposal of the gallant colonel, and rumor at present intimates that dreams of future oratical triumphs in the House will be abandoned for quietness and a large salary. In this case truly silence will be golden.

The Montreal Daily News makes this important announcement:—"It is confirmed that the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise will arrive in Canada about the commencement of autumn and will visit the United States. Official notice of the visit is about to be sent to Washington, and it is said that the Prince Alexis of Russia will arrive at the same time."

It is stated on good authority, says the Liverpool Mercury, that Sir Francis Bond Head, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, is the author of the "Ballad of Dorking."

Cobourg, Peterboro' & Marmora Railway and Mining Company.

The annual meeting of Stockholders in this Company was held at the Company's offices here at noon on Wednesday last, at which the following Stockholders were present, viz:—Messrs. Isaac Butts, Jno Harshman, J H Shoenberger, G K Shoenberger, T S Blair, H N Monck, Hon Malcolm Cameron, John Bell, Col W P Chamblin, Alex Fraser M P P, John D Armour, Q C, Wm Kerr, J W Kerr, W J Stanton, J H Dumble, W Hargraft and D Brodie.

The meeting was organized by calling Hon. M. Cameron to the chair, and appointing Mr. F. J. Haydon Secretary.—The minutes of the last meeting having been read and approved, the Managing Directors submitted a Report of the Financial operations of the Company for the year ending December 31, 1870, which was approved of and ordered to be printed. He also submitted a supplementary report showing the operations for the six months ending up to date, which was more satisfactory than anticipated. Of course the supplementary report was not formal, as many contracts are at present under fulfilment, and was made for the purpose of putting the Stockholders in possession of the fullest information as to the present condition and prospects of the Company. We are glad to hear by the general statement of the Managing Directors that although ore ex No. 1 quality had become more scarce the quality of the ore generally had increased from 2½ to 3 per cent in market value. The works at the mines, under the direction of Mr. Goodal, were quite satisfactory, and the road, rolling stock, station house, &c, in the best and most effective condition.

The election of Directors was then proceeded with, Mr W Hargraft and Mr J W Kerr being appointed Scrutineers. The Ballot resulted in the choice of Isaac Butts, Jno Harshman, J H Shoenberger, Hon M Cameron, T S Blair, John Bell, H N Monck, W P Chamblies. The Mayor of Cobourg is a Director ex officio.

Immediately after the meeting had been adjourned, the newly elected Board of Directors held a meeting, at which Isaac Butts, Esq., was elected President.

On Thursday evening a deputation from Peterboro' and a deputation of the Cobourg Railway committee waited upon the Directors and laid their scheme before them for completeing the extension of the road to Peterboro' and Mud Lake. We are glad to hear that the Board look upon the project with much favor, and appointed a special committee with power to proceed with the negociations, and when they have been fully matured to call a special meeting of the Board of Directors. From what we can learn we have now no doubt of the successful completion of the connection once more with Peterboro' and with Mud Lake also.—Sentinel.

Suppose.

Let us imagine a Reform Government in power at present, and that McKenzie Blake and Holton had been appointed by the British Government our interests instead of the Hon. J. A. Suppose either of gentlemen had concealed the rights our Premier has done. What a storm the Tories would have raised! "Treason, potably, rebels, democrats, republicans, annexationists," would not be the tithe of the epithets hurled at our devoted head by that party. Those terrible grits would doubtless be held up as demagogues of the most rabid kind, to sell their birthright for mess or pottage, almost Judas Iscariots, delivering up their country into the hands of its enemies for less than thirty pieces of silver. What a crowd of "I told-you-so" would spring up! "The country is going to the dogs with those fellows," would be the refrain of their songs. And should Parliament meet, and a reform government carry through such a burlesque on fair play and the Governor General sign its acceptance, there would be a gathering of the Jacobites and "as history repeats itself" a burning of Parliament house,—a pelting of Her Majesty's representatives with odorous eggs,—a cry for rebellion, and a hunting of a royal man like partridges. But as treason mean to say, "out of office," and royalty means, "Government pap," then the treaty is all right, and however degrade! to Canadians it may be, we, because John A. did put his sign manuel to it, the part organs cryed out, as they raise their manacled hands, "all serene." In our simplicity we thought that love of country was a sentiment to be respected, cherished and applauded, but our opponents say, no. It means will pay. Inmatter of L.S.D. Editor our fathers, who bled and died for "territorial rights," were fools or one of us have woefully degenerated. Worthies, which is it?

It is reported that the private secretary of Lieut.-Governor Archibald has been killed in a duel.

Dr. G. M. Warren, a Canadian and a graduate of Victoria college, Coburg, has been decorated by the King of Bavaria with the Cross of the Order of Ludwig, in acknowledgment of his services as an officer of the German Ambulance Corps during the recent war.

FELLOWS' HYPOPHOSPHITES.—Mr. Fellows wishes us to state that he has no authorized agent, but that his Hypophosphites may be obtained of all respectable Druggists and Apothecaries at his price.

A Successful Fire Insurance Company.

THE HANDSOME VALUE OF THE STOCK IS NOW 200 PER CENT.

The following is an extract from the annual report of the Agricultural Insurance Company, of Watertown, N. Y., as presented by the Secretary, January 11, 1871:—

GENTLEMEN—The year just closed has been a disasterous one for Fire Insurance Companies generally throughout the country. The risks of very many have not been more than sufficient to meet their losses and expenses, while others have lost largely beyond their receipts. The extreme hot weather of the past summer, continuing for months, many localities suffering severely from destruction of property and valuable real estate, our losses by lightning were very large—double those of any former year. We paid during the year 145 losses by lightening alone. Our entire losses for the year were $162 250 81, an increase of about $65 000 over any previous year. But notwithstanding the large increase in our losses, the increase in our business has enabled us to add about the usual average amount to our surplus. It may not be out of place here to take a retrospect of our business for the last eight years:—

Jan. 1st, 1863, the amount of our surplus above capital stock was	$ 45,572 79
1864, it was increased to the sum of	67,807 67
1865	103,677 17
1866	150,221 39
1867	202,038 84
1868	238,136 24
1869	306,086 89
1870	387,714 74
1871	441,358 57

This last amount, $441,358 57, with our capital of $100,000 00, make our assets at this date $541,358 57. It has been our rule in the past to make a dividend to our Stockholders to the amount only of our interests and rents. I think this policy wise, and should be adhered to in the future. The interest and rents of the Company for the past year amount to the sum of $29 027 30. I would recommend that a dividend of 30 per cent upon the capital stock of the company be declared, which will only exceed the amount received for interests and rents the sum of $72 70.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The above most favorable report must satisfy the most incredulous that the Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N. Y., is the strongest and most reliable Company doing business in Canada. It has deposited with the Receiver General of Canada $100,000.00. It will accept only non-hazardous risks. It will only insure detached residences in towns and vicinity, and farming property it never can loose to exceed $5,000 in one fire, as in taking larger risks they immediately reinsure the difference in some other good Company. Its rates are the lowest of any Company in the Dominion. It is a purely Purely stock Company, and every $100 of its stock is worth $300, being over twice as much as that of any other Fire Insurance Company doing business in Canada.

Mr. W. A. KING is agent for this Company at Peterborough.

THE AGRICULTURAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—The Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N.Y., has within the past year making a very successful effort to extend his business in Ontario. A head office has been established in Kingston and branch agencies have been formed throughout the country. Full compliance with Canadian laws relating to foreign Insurance Companies has been observed. Everthing that denotes bona fides as capacity for doing real business has been shown by his Company, which in the State of New York, is looked up to as one of the best of its class in the State. It thus stands at the head of ninety-four Companies for amount of business done and its stock is a most valuable security.—Some gentlemen in Kingston well known for their business knowledge and good standing, have warmly helped on the "Agricultural," and have pronounced its affairs to be healthy, the business well conducted, and have recommended it to the confidence of farmers. This Company is offering advantages which it will be well for farmers and the owners of isolated property to consider.

Warren Leland on Poultry Raising.

A gentleman in Michigan made inquiries of the New York Farmers' Club about poultry raising, and Mr. Warren Leland answered :—

1. I give my fowls great range. Eighteen acres belong to them exclusively.—Then the broods have the range of another big lot, and the turkeys go half a mile or more from the house. The eighteen acres of poultry yard is rough land of little use for tillage. It has a pond in it and many rocks, and bushes, and sandy places, and ash heaps, and lime, and bones, and grass, and a place which I plough to give them worms.

2. When a hen has set I take her box, throw out the straw and earth, let it be out in the sun and rain a few days and give it a good coat of whitewash on both sides. In winter, when it is very cold, I have an old stove in their house, and keep the warmth above freezing. There is also an open fireplace where I build a fire in cool wet days Then dry themselves, and when the fire goes out there is a bed of ashes or them to wallow in. Summer and winter my hens have all the lime, ashes and sand they want.

3. Another reason why I have such luck is because my poultry yard receives all the scraps from the Metropolitan Hotel. Egg-making is no easy work, and hens will not do much of it without high feed. They need just what a man who works requires —wheat bread and meat. Even when wheat costs two dollars I believe in feeding it to hens. As to breeds, I prefer the Brahmas, light and dark. I change roosters every spring, and a man on the farm has no other duty than to take care of my poultry. I often have three thousand spring chickens.

Technical Terms Applied to Poultry.

To the novice in poultry lore the following explanation of terms applied to this department of stock may prove useful :—

Brood—Offspring or hatch of Chickens.

Broody—Inclined to sit or incubate.

Caruncultated—Covered with fleshy protuberances like a turkey-cock's head and neck, or the head of a Musk drake.

Cascue—The helmet-like fleshy protuberance or comb of the Guinea fowl.

Clutch—The number of eggs sat upon by a fowl, or the number of chickens brought off.

Clunk—Shrunk and stringy, applied to flesh which has never been properly fattened, or which has fallen away after being fat.

Crest—The tuft of feathers which some fowls, like the Polands, have upon their heads.

Deaf-ear—A name improperly applied to the true ear of the fowl. A shallow hole, or depression, with a hair-like covering.

Dubbing—Trimming off the combs and wattles of game fowls, for fighting, or for exhibition.

Dunghills—Common fowls; those of mixed breeds, not crossed with definite purpose, as those of a breed degenerated.

Fluff—Soft downy feathers in masses upon certain parts of fowl—as upon the rumps and thighs of Cochins.

Gills—The flap that hangs below the beak.

Hackle—Long shining feathers on the neck of the cock or hen.

Molting—Periodical shedding and renewal of feathers.

Pea-comb—A triple comb—a principal comb with a small one on each side.

Poult—A young turkey, or other gallinaceous fowl, before it takes on the full plumage of a mature bird.

Primaries—The largest feathers on the wing.

Rose-comb—A full, broad, flat comb, called also "double comb."

Secondaries—Quills growing on the second bone of the wing.

Top-knot—See crest.

Vulture-hocked—Having the feathers on the thigh project backward, below and beyond the "hock" joints.

Wattles—The fleshy excrescence that grows under the throat of a cock or turkey.

Wing-coverts—Feathers covering part of the forearm of the fowl.—People's Practical Poultry Book.

Ground Bones for Poultry.

The editor of the Canadian Poultry Chronicle, in an excellent article on rearing and feeding chickens, after enforcing the necessity of scrupulous cleanliness, feeding well, often, and not more at one time than will be all picked up and using by preference as the staple food coarse oatmeal moistened with milk, and the occasional mixture of rice or other grains—for the sake of variety—thus alludes to the efficacy of ground bones :—

"Mr. Wright recommends, in addition to the above, the use of 'ground bones' or 'bone dust.' This latter substance, he says has many advantages, and, after several years' experience, we can affirm without hesitation that there is a marked difference both in the size and stamina of birds reared with it over others. It adds to the size of birds; it postpones their maturity or 'setting,' as poultry men call it, after which growth nearly ceases; it greatly prevents weakness in the cockerels; and it tends to produce full and profuse feathering, and to assist in fledging. Burnt bones, or phosphate of lime, have not the same effect by any means; and raw bones crushed have the fault of inducing early laying in the pullets, whereas the bone dust rather postpones it. The proportion should be about a tea-spoonful to every half pint of meal, and be given thus from the time the chickens are ten days old."

William L. Barrey.—A compositor on the Lebanon, (Tenn) Herald, has just passed his 91st birthday. He is promptly at his case at 7 o'clock every morning, and sets 6000 ems a day without difficulty.—He began to set type 73 years ago, and still follows the business out of love for the art, having no need to work for money.—Barrey is still hale and vigorous.

On the 16th of june, Two little boys sons of James L. Brown, editor of the Temperance Advocate, North Adams Massachusetts, were buried by the falling of a sand bank upon them. The oldest, aged six, was taken out dead—the other with his shoulder broken and badly bruised.

The people of United States according to Commissioner Wells, swallowed by retail, in a single year, $1,573,491,863 worth of liquor poison. Of this vast some, New York guzzled $256,017,620 ; Pennsylvania $152,663,405 ; and Illinois, $119,993,016.—

Returns to the Treasury show that the total number of distilleries in operation in the country on June 1st was 215, with a total capacity of 192,069, gallons. Of this number, Illinois has 28, Indiana, 17 ; Kentuckey, 36 ; Ohio, 34 ; and Pennsylvania, 55.

The population of London enumerated as living at midnight on Sunday, April 2, was 3,251,903, an increase of 447,815 in ten years. The houses occupied by this enormous mass of people stretch along the banks of the Thames from Woolwich up to Hammersmith, and across its stream from Norwood to Hampstead, over 122 square miles. On an average there are 2,669 persons to a square mile.

The prohibition Era:—"All the drunkard-makers of Waverly, Iowa, were arrested the other day, and fined for selling liquor. They held a mass meeting and resolved to languish in gaol for an indefinite period before they would pay the fines. A little taste of poison, however satisfied them, and the greenbacks were forthcoming. Moral—Prison suasion is the thing for rumsellers."

A victim of intemperance in this city, not long since, had the delirium tremens, and who do you think had to take care of him? Why temperance people of course. The very men that sold the liquor to bring him to such a state were asked to help to take care of the man whom they had robed of money and in other, but they turned up their noses at the idea; and yet they are licensed.

Select Poetry.

Weighing the Baby.

How many pounds does the baby weigh?
Baby who came but a month ago?
How many pounds from the crowning curl
To the rosy point of the restless toe?

Grandfather ties the 'kerchief's knot,
Tenderly guides the swinging weight,
And carefully over his glasses peers
To read and record, "only eight."

Softly the echo goes around;
The father laughs at the tiny girl;
The fair young mother sighs the words,
While grandmother smooths the golden curl.

And stoping above the precious thing,
Nestles a kiss within a prayer,
Murmuring softly: Little one,
Grandfather did not weigh you fair."

Nobody weighed the baby's smile,
Or the love that came with the helpless one.
Nobody weighed the threads of care
From which a woman's life is spun.

No index tells the mighty worth
Of little baby's quiet breath,
A soft unceasing monitrone,
Patient and faithful unto death.

Nobody weighs the baby's soul,
For here on earth no weight there be
That could avail; God only knows
Its value in eternity.

Only eight pounds to hold a soul
That seeks no angel's silver wings,
But shines in it this human guise,
Within so small and frail a thing!

O mother laugh your merry notes;
Be gay and glad, but don't forget
From baby's eyes look out a soul
That claims a home in Eden yet.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glow and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the pernicious continuation until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely needs to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and subtle tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, internal ulcers may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in its more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the female and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Ovarian Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Ulcerations and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it. So also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED

Beware of Counterfeits.

Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

MANUFACTURERS OF THE CELEBRATED

LOCKMAN SEWING MACHINE,

Take pleasure in announcing that the popularity of the Sewing Machine manufactured by them is still on the increase. They are now turning them out at the rate of 600 per month and yet have been compelled within the last two weeks to increase their facilities to a capacity of one thousand per month.

The Lockman Machine, from its capacity to sew the heaviest fabrics with linen thread, as well as the finest cambrics with No. 150 Cotton, is pre-eminently the Farmer's Favorite Family Friend.

It is so exceedingly simple in its parts, and so strongly and durably made, that it does not require a mechanical genius for its management.

The manufacturers challenge the world to produce its equal, and yet its price is from forty to Fifty per cent. Lower than that of any other first-class Shuttle Lock-stitch Sewing Machine.

EVERY MACHINE IS WARRANTED.

AND EYE GLASSES.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

Dimes and Dollars.

Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes,
An empty pocket's the worst of crimes;
If a man's down give him a thrust,
Trample the beggar into the dust.
Pennilessness poverty, quite appalling!
Knock him over and kick him falling,
If a man's up lift him higher,
His used is for mis, and who's the liar?
Dimes and dollars, &c.

I know a poor but an honest man,
Who tries to live on a shoestring plan;
But poor he is and poor will be,
Sharp thistles and tassel thirty bring
At home he meeteth a starving wife,
Abroad he leadeth a leper's life;
They struggle against a fearful odds
They will not bow to the people's gods.
Dimes and dollars, &c.

I know a poor but worthy youth,
Whose hopes are built on a maiden's truth;
But she will break her vows with ease,
But a richer comes whose charms say these:—
A hollow heart and an empty head,
A face well tinged with brandy red;
A soul well trained in villainy's school,
But cash! stout cash! you know the rule.
Dimes and dollars, &c.

So get ye wealth, no matter how,
No question asked of the rich I'll vow;
Steal by night and steal by day,
Doing it all in a legal way.
Join the church and never forsake her,
Learn to cant and insult your maker;
Be hypocrite, liar, knave and fool,
But don't be poor—remember the rule.
Dimes and dollars, &c.

A Managing Wife.

Ezra Newton had just finished looking over his yearly accounts.

"Well," asked his wife, "how do you come out?"

"I find," said her husband, "that my expenses during the year has been thirty-seven cents over a thousand dollars!"

"And your income has been a thousand dollars?"

"Yes, I managed pretty well, didn't I?"

"Do you think it managing well to exceed your income?" Said his wife.

"What's thirty-seven cents?" asked Mr. Newton, lightly.

"Not much to be sure, but still it is something. It seems to me that we ought to have saved, instead of falling behind."

"But how can we on this salary, Elizabeth?" "We haven't lived extravagant-ly."

"Perhaps there is something in which we might retrench. Suppose you mention some of your items."

"The most important are house rent one hundred and fifty dollars, articles of food, five hundred dollars."

"Just half."

"Yes, and you'll admit that we can't retrench them, Elizabeth. I like to live well. I had enough of poor board before I got married. Now, I mean to live as well as I can."

"Still we ought to be saving something for a rainy day. Ezra."

"That would be something like carrying an umbrella when the sun is shining."

"Still it is well to have an umbrella in the house."

"I can't controvert your logic, Elizabeth, but I'm afraid you shan't be able to save anything this year. When I get my salary raised, it will be time enough to think of that."

"Let me make a proposition to you," said Mrs. Newton. "You say one half of your income has been expended on articles of food. Are you willing to allow me that sum for the purpose?"

"You guarantee to pay all the bills out of it."

"Yes."

"Then I will shift the responsibility upon you with pleasure. But I can tell you beforehand you won't be able to save much out of it."

"Perhaps not. At any rate, I will engage not to exceed it."

"That's well. I shouldn't like to have any additional bills to pay. As I am paid every month I will at each payment hand you half the money, said Mr. Newton."

The different character of husband and wife may be judged from the conversation which has been recorded. Mr. Newton had but little prudence or forethought.—He lived chiefly for the present, and seemed to fancy that ever contingencies might arise in the future, he would be somehow provided for Now trust in Providence is a very proper feeling, but there is a good deal of truth in the old adage, that God will help those who will help themselves.

Mrs. Newton, on the contrary, had been brought upon a family which was compelled to be economical, and although she was disposed to deny herself comforts, she felt this it was desirable to procure them at a fair price.

The time at which this conversation took place was at the commencement of the second year of their married life.

The first step that Mrs. Newton took in accepting the charge of the household expenses, was to institute the practice of paying cash for the articles that came under her department. She accordingly called on the butcher and enquired:

"How often have you been in the habit of presenting your bills, Mr. Williams?"

"Once in six months," was the reply.

"And I suppose you sometimes have bad bills?"

"Yes; one third of my profits on an average are swept off with them," he replied.

"And you could afford, I suppose, to sell somewhat cheaper for ready money?"

"Yes; I would be glad if all my customers would give me a chance to do so."

"I will set them an example, then, said Mrs. Newton. "Hereafter, whatever articles shall be purchased of you will be paid for on the spot, and we shall expect you to sell as reasonable as you can."

This arrangement was also made with the others, who, it is scarcely needful to say, were glad to enter into the arrangement. Ready money is the great support of trade, and a cash customer is worth two who purchases on credit.

Fortunately Mrs. Newton had a small supply of money by her, which lasted till the first monthly instalment from her husband became due. Thus she was enabled to carry out the cash plan from the beginning.

Another plan which occurred to her as likely to save expense, was to purchase in large quantities. She had soon saved enough from the money allowed her to do this. For example, instead of buying sugar a few pounds at a time, she purchased a barrel, and so succeeded in saving at or so on the pound. This, perhaps amounted to but a trifle in the course of the year, but the same system carried on in regard to other articles yielded a result which was by no means a trifle.

There were other ways in which a careful housekeeper is able to limit expenses which Mrs. Newton did not overlook.—With an object in view she was always on the lookout to prevent waste, and to get the full value of whatever was expended. The result was beyond her anticipations.

At the close of the year, on examining her bank book, for she had regularly deposited whatever money she had not occasion to use in one of those institutions—she found she had one hundred and fifty dollars besides reimbursing herself for the money the first month, and having already in her another account.

"Well, Elizabeth, have you found your allowance sufficient for the present?" said her husband at this time. "I guess you have not found it so easy to save as you thought for."

"I have saved something, however," said his wife. "But how is it with you?"

"That's more than I can say. However I have not exceeded my income, that's one good thing. We have lived fully as well, and I don't know but better than last year, when we spent five hundred."

"It's knack, Ezra," said his wife smiling.

She was not inclined to mention how much she had saved. She wanted some time or other to surprise him with it when it would be of some service.

"She may possibly have saved up twenty five dollars," thought Mr. Newton, "or some such trifle," and dismissed the matter from his mind.

At the end of the second year, Mrs Newton's saving, including the interest, amounted to three hundred and thirty dollars, and she began to feel quite rich.

Her husband did not think to enquire how she had succeeded, supposing as before, that it could be but a very small sum. However, he had a good piece of news to communicate. His salary had been raised from a thousand to twelve hundred dollars.

He added, "As I before allowed you one half of your income for household expenses, it is no more than fair that I should do so now. This will give you a better chance to save it than before."

"Indeed, I do not know how you have succeeded thus far."

As before, Mrs. Newton merely said that she had saved something, without specifying the amount.

Her allowance was increased to six hundred dollars, but her expenses were not proportionally increased at all; so that her savings for her third year swelled the aggregate sum in the bank to six hundred.

Mr. Newton, on the contrary, in spite of his increased salary, was no better off at the end of the third year than before.—His expenses had increased by a hundred dollars, though he would have found it difficult to tell in what way his comfort or happiness had been increased thereby. In spite of his carelessness in regard to his own affairs, Mr. Newton was an excellent man in regard to his business, and his services were a source of profit to his employer. As accordingly increased his salary from time to time, until it reached sixteen hundred dollars. He had steadily preserved the custom of assigning one half to his wife for the same purpose as heretofore, and this had become such a habit that he never thought to enquire whether she found it necessary to employ the whole or not.

Thus ten years rolled away. During all this time Mr. Newton lived in the hired house for which he had paid an annual rent of one hundred and fifty dollars.—Latterly, however, he had become dissatisfied with it. It had passed into the hands of a new landlord, who was not disposed to keep it in repair when he considered it desirable.

About this time a block of excellent houses were erected by a capitalist, as tenements. Mr. Newton had a strong desire to move into one of them. He mentioned it to his wife one morning.

"What is the rent, Ezra?" inquired she.

"Two hundred and twenty-five dollars for the corner house; two hundred for either of the others."

"The corner one would be preferable on account of the side windows."

"Yes, and they have a large yard beside. I think we must hire one of them."

"I guess I'll engage one to-day; you know your year is out next week."

"Please wait, Ezra, till to-morrow will be sufficiently early."

Soon after breakfast Mrs. Newton called on Squire Bent, the owner of the new block, and intimated her desire to be shown the corner house. The request he readily complied with. Mrs. Newton was quite delighted with all the arrangements and expressed her satisfaction.

"Are the houses for sale or to let?" she enquired."

"Either," said the owner.

"The rent is, I understand, two hundred and twenty-five dollars."

"Yes, I consider the corner house worth at least twenty-five dollars more than the rest."

"And what do you charge for the house to a cash purchaser?" asked Mrs. Newton with subdued eagerness.

"Four thousand dollars cash," was the reply, and that is but a small advance on the cost.

"Very well, I will buy it of you," added Mrs. Newton quietly.

"What did I understand you to say?" asked the squire, scarcely believing his ears.

"I repeat that I will buy this house at your price, and pay the money within a week."

"Then the house is yours. But your husband said nothing of his intention, and in fact does not know,

"That he had the money to invest,' I suppose you would say. Neither does he know it, and I must ask you not to tell him for the present."

The next morning Mrs. Newton invited her husband to take a walk, but without specifying the direction.

They soon stood in front of the house in which he desired to live.

"Wouldn't you like to go in?" she asked.

"Yes, it is a pity we haven't got a key."

"I have the key," said his wife, and forthwith walking up the steps and proceeded to open the door.

"When did you get the key of Squire Bent?" asked the husband.

"Yesterday when I bought the house," said his wife quietly.

Mr. Newton gazed at his wife in profound astonishment.

"What on earth do you mean, Elizabeth?" he enquired.

"Just what I say. The house is mine, and what is mine is thine. So the house is yours, Ezra."

"Where in the name of goodness did you raise the money?" asked her husband in amazement as great as ever.

"Haven't I been a managing wife for so many years," said Mrs. Newton smiling.

With some difficulty Mrs. Newton persuaded her husband that the price of the house was the result of her savings. He felt when he surveyed the commodious arrangement of the house that he had reason to be grateful for the prudence of his managing wife.

How the Deacon was Sold.

We shall never have you, Letty—leastways, if I can prevent it. A city dandy like him, indeed! I'd just as lief you married Don Hooker the idler, as to become the wife of that popinjay.

And Deacon Merriam deliberately tipped back his chair against the side of the house, or rather against the sink-room door—a habit that was a favorite one with him—and seemed to regard the case as settled.

Lettie began to cry a little, then thought better of it, and drying her eyes, grew rapidly indignant.

He isn't a popinjay! she said. He's as good as anybody, and a deal better than Peter Bridge, if you did but know it.

Peter Bridge was her father's favorite, a sturdy well-to-do young farmer, though people did say he was a trifle parsimonious.

Well, I don't know it, and nobody else don't know it, either! he cried angrily. Peter Bridge is a king to him, and has got four times the money, to say nothing of the old Bridge farm, that is worth five thousand, if it is worth a dollar. I tell ye, Letty, a gal could do much worse than to Marry Peter Bridge.

And much better, I hope, said Letty. "At any rate I shall try, for I wouldn't wipe my slippers on Peter Bridge."

Well, as I said before, you never shall marry Ross Hardinge, snapped Deacon Merriman grimly; so that is the end on't. And if you won't have Peter, why you can be an old maid. I suppose.

I shall not do either. I have promised already to be Ross Hardinge's wife, and have no intention of breaking my word—so there! And then, astonished at her own temerity, Letty burst into tears.

The deacon sat silent a moment. In all his long life he had never encountered a spirit quite so rebellious as this.

I never, he cried, and in his dismay endeavored to regain the perpendicular, but his chair was jilted so far that it required some exertion to do this; and, giving a spring, the door against which it was leaning flew open; and over he went amongst the pots and kettles, and down came a pail of dirty water on his devoted head.

We are afraid the deacon made use of expressions that it would be wicked for a sinner to utter. He rattled around some time before he succeeded in getting upon his feet, and when that difficult operation was accomplished, his features resembled those of an Indian chief with the war paint on. The wife and daughter fairly shrieked with laughter.

Hush up! he exclaimed. It's a pretty time, if I'm to be made a laughing stock of in my own house. I wont endure it.

"Just look in the glass," replied Letty.

The deacon sniffed, but looked as suggested, and the sight of his face did not improve his temper a particle.

So you will marry Ross Hardings, he asked.

Yes father.

You won't. Miss Disobedience. I'll put a lock on the door of you room and keep you on bread and water. I'll pat from here before the windows, and not let you write a word to communicate with him.

But, I am eighteen, cried Letty, turning as red as a penny.

I don't care if you are eighty-one! No daughter of mine shall marry a fool; and he is a fool, if ever there was one.

The deacon was as good as his word regarding the lock. He had one put on the door of her room, and Letty became a prisoner. Then he told Ross Hardinge that he never should have Letty.

Why not? asked Ross, quite cooly.

She never shall marry an idiot.

Ross smiled.

Look here, old gentleman, if you wasn't to be my father-in-law, I'd make you ask pardon for that little speech. As it is, I suppose I'll have to consider upon it instead.

And if I wasn't a deacon, I'd teach you better things, you puppy.

And with that the deacon hurried away to the blacksmith shop for the iron bars to be placed over Letty's windows.

A fool, am I! Ross Hardinge muttered, after he was gone. We'll see, old gentleman; the case is by no means decided. Perhaps there are bigger fools in this world than I, and one of them may be a deacon. I like Letty, and she likes me, and I'm not going to give her up without a struggle of some kind.

So he sat down and wrote this quixotic letter:—

"DEAR TOM:—You once said you would oblige me by giving me half of you fortune, if I would accept of it. I told you I would accept the will for the deed (for I knew it was nothing but foolish enthusiasm in you to offer to pay me for doing my duty by dragging you out of the river), but now if you will simply transfer the whole of your bank stock to my credit for a few days, it would be a great accomodation. I pledge you my word that I will return every cent of it within a month.

And then he signed, and sealed it, and sent it away to the post office. Three days later he walked into the office of Squire Merriam, the deacon's brother, and told him he wished to obtain his advice.

In what respect, demanded the Squire. The investment of money. My property is mostly in bank stock, and I wish to invest a portion in something else. What would you advise?

I would prefer to see your certificates of stock as a preliminary, dryly observed the squire.

Out came pocket books and memorandums, and sufficient stock was accounted for to amount to thirty thousand dollars. The deacon's brother began to open his eyes.

By Jove! he said to himself—he wasn't a deacon, you know.—If he has got that much money old Reuben is making a fool of himself. I'll put a flea in his ear forthwith.

Then, turning to Ross, he added aloud: I'd put it in real estate, young man,—I'd put in real estate.

Ross handed him ten dollars, and left the office. And before night deacon Merriam was posted.

Off came the lock and key, and the iron bars, having never been put on, were stowed away with other old rubbish in a hurry

The next day Ross ventured to call, and the warm reception he met was a great surprise to Letty, who never had known her father to relent before. She held her peace, however, and did not allude to it after he was gone.

Her father did.

I've changed my mind, Letty, he said. I've heard something about Ross Hardinge that has convinced he is not so bad as I thought him. Young people will be young people, and if you wish to marry him, forget what I have said.

But he did not tell her what he had heard.

Of course, the deacon's objection removed, it was all smooth water, and Ross drove his wooing so furiously, that in three weeks they were married.

Then her husband explained his artifice to her, fearing that she had been deceived, but her father had never told her what had changed his sentiments. And instead of blaming him, she kissed him and called him a dear nice fellow.

In a week the deacon began to talk bank stock.

It dont trouble me said Ross with a laugh.

Don't trouble you! Haven't you thirty thousand dollars invested in bank stock?

No sir—not thirty quite.

The deacon said something that deacons are not supposed to utter.

What has become of the wealth you showed my brother? he asked.

O, that was borrowed for the occasion, said Ross, quietly. I returned it as soon as I had accomplished my purpose. You called me a fool once, and I vowed to be up with you, and rather think I am.

If the deacon prayed that night more fervently than usual, it was because he had a terrible struggle with Old Adam within him.

After all Ross Hardinge did not make a bad son-in-law. And when he got his own half Cedarville, the deacon forgave him entirely.

The Country of Corea.

Corea is a country of northeastren Asia. Its area is 90,000 square miles, more or less; in fact its limits are so uncertain that any large figure may be mentioned. The population, we are told, is 10,000,000 or 12,000,000. It is called by the natives "Tayosien." The Chinese, to whom it is tributary, call it "Kao lee," and the Japanese, "Korai," whence its tributary name. It is an extensive peninsula bounded by the Yellow Sea, the Straits of Corea, and the Sea of Japan. In addition to the continental territory there is a large archipelago of islands about which much is not known, but these seems to be reason to suppose that Commodore Rodgers' work, telegraphed this morning, will bring a knowledge of them to the geographers. In the west and south the soil is fertile, but in the north and on the coast the agricultural wealth of the people is not great. The climate is very cold and in summer too abundant rains fall. Its most valuable exports are the medicinal root ginseng and Corea tiger skins, which are far more beautiful than those of Bengal. The minerals include gold, silver, iron, rocksalt, copper and coal. The musk of Corea is world-famous. Their manufactories are, for a barbarous people, of considerable excellence. Their sabres are known through out Eastern Asia, and their matchlocks superior to anything that the Chinese produce. Their textile fabrics of silk, hemp and grass are substantially woven. The Coreans first popularized the use of paper in manufactures. It is from them that the "Yankee notion" of paper boats and paper walls or doors is borrowed. The commerce of the country is chiefly with China and Japan. The vassalage in which it is held by China is not very important. A tribute of 800 ounces is annually paid, and an embassy is sent to report to the Chinese Emperor Corean progress. The religion is Buddhism, and the monarch is spiritual as well as secular ruler. There are some followers of Sinto, and some believers in Confucius. The government is administered by five departments of state. The army is said to be 740,000 men and the navy numbers 200 vessels. Kingki-tao is the capital of the country, and is situated on the Keang River. The archipelago to which the American naval operations will doubtless be confined consists of a number of small islands between 33 and 36 north latitude and 126 degrees east longitude.

The Levis Camp.

L'Evenment, a French paper, printed in Quebec city, of the 18th inst., says a telegram from that city, "urges two reasons why the case of Mr. Murame is unworthy of further notice than the institution of a complaint in the Police Court for common assault. Firstly, that he is only a French colporteur, and not an ordained minister, and secondly, that his wounds are not serious. A Italian introduced into the same camp a dancing bear, the sight of which caused a simultaneous breaking up of several companies while under arms, without leave or command from their superior officers. Yet the brute was tolerated, and the owner allowed to leave the field without a scratch." The reason is unique, and worthy the source from which it emanates. Because it and its keeper were not maltreated in the camp, though it broke up several companies, therefore those who did maltreat and abuse a Protestant colporteur for distributing the Bible should go unpunished. This must be French logic. The comparison is an outrage only equalled by the assault itself."

The fact that a dancing bear broke up "several companies while under arms, without leave from their superior officers," does not say much for the discipline of the camp; but gives a fair illustration of the lawlessness of the men who compose the French companies, and the little respect they have for their commanders. It is a pity Adjutant General Ross was not present witness the discipline of these troops.

Freemasonry Under the Canopy of Temperance.

(From the Temperance Star.)

SIR,—It has occurred to me that a most valuable adjunct to the various resolutions of the Temperance cause, and the beginning of a brilliant era in the history of Freemasonry, would be the formation of a Masonic lodge on Temperance principles. This is expedient for many reasons. A large number of Freemasons desire it, that they may escape the importunities of those of their brethren who make the wine-cup the order of the day, and of them first, too, very often. Many who would otherwise be abstainers are too frequently detained in the "world of spirits" by nothing else than the chief inducement to taste, taste, and handle at Masonic banquets. Sipping freemasons glasses of half-a-dozen kinds of wine would most likely cause the vinous devoted to stumble in his homeward march, or say, "I beg your pardon, sir," to an unlucky shutter which his hand may have approximated too nearly to be pleasant.—Then we must not forget what a prominent precedent a Temperance Masonic lodge would introduce. It would be a beginning to another phase of virtue in one of Truth's grand temples. The truth inherent in Temperance would be in the cement that would firmly hold together the then virtuous edifice of Freemasonry, with its pure columns of sublime teachings, its line of sacred antiquity, and its capital of generosity. But if, upon these principles, a lodge of Temperance Freemasons should not be found sufficiently virulent in its reformatory principles, i. e., it would doubtless be—like other reformers—in their incipient stages—a target for the shafts of those who fear innovations, and think that old systems are the best, be they, ever so remote from common-sense and progress. Nec Minus Fortiter might be a suggestive device for the fraternal band enrolled under the auspices of other deities than Bacchus, since they would have seceded from all nocturnal, vinous orgies.

It is to be hoped, sir, that Masonic brethren will consider the foregoing, and be induced to send you their names and addresses, so that a lodge of this kind may be formed.

Not less bravely will we fight,
Though we rush from Bacchus' chair,
Calling others to eschew it,
Nor shall it be done in vain.

Then the mystic tie is knotted,
Then each heart, and head and hand,
Will assist the brave that plotted
'Gainst the torment of the land.

Fellow craft, apprentice, master,
May the grip be not in vain;
Give us tokens rather faster,
Come among us, break your chain.

Soon Freemasonry and virtue,
May together make their march;
Though the wine-god has begirt you,
You can reach the Royal Arch.

Proud are most accepted Masons,
Reaching the sublime degree;
But it is a lengthy day since
Alchol beheld them free.

—Yours, &c., A FREEMASON.

The new law in England for compulsory education, has brought to light some curious things. The farmers of this ask seem to have forgotten that a lord does not need to know anything, for its provisions apply alike to aristocrat and plebian. In some of the investigations which have attended the enforcement of the law, the officials have declared that they "found more ignorance and debasement of mind at the west end of London than at east end." One noble lord sent his son to school, when it was discovered that "his mind was a perfect blank, not only the blank of the child, but the parents." A lady with a title to her name," declared that her son could not learn, "though she flogged him fifteen times a day." The fact is the lady should not have been applicable to the nobility. What occasion have they to learn? They are superior to the common herd by right of birth and social position, and have a right to be idiots. There ought to be a rebellion of the lords against this attempt to force education upon their children.

An Ottawa despatch to a local paper says —"The United States Government have asked permission of the Imperial Government for American fishermen to be allowed to fish in Canadian waters on condition that all the duties paid upon Canadian fish in American ports shall be kept account of, and refunded in the event of the House of Representatives agreeing to the removal of the duties in question." No doubt of it; and there is as little reason to doubt that the request will be granted. In this way the question is fast being settled as to whether Canada will assent to the treaty. Before Parliament shall have had an opportunity of passing upon it, our position will be so compromised as to render its negation a dangerous and embarrassing step. There is little use, to our apprehension, of regarding the treaty as anything else than an accomplished fact to all intents and purposes; we will have to take it as it is, for "better or for worse."—Monetary Times.

TERRIFIC STORM.—Advices state that Sir Wm. Logan and his party, who left St. John's N. F., as a geological surveying expedition, on the 12th inst., were entirely cut off on the route by a severe storm on the 14th, which swept away bridges and flooded the principal parts of the only road they had to travel upon. It is probable that the horses and baggage attached to the expedition have been either lost or badly infured. The party are believed to be safe, inasmuch as they were provided with portable gutta percha boats and one canoe. The storm has done considerable damage in and around the towns of Tonsail and Holyrood, in Newfoundland. It is said to be the continuation of a hurricane which blew over the coast of Labrador some weeks ago, destroying 325 fishing smacks, 25 dwelling houses, over 40 stores, and about $300,000 worth of dried fish,

The crop prospects are excellent this year, hay only excepted, and the deficiency in the hay crop is not general, it is confined to small sections of the country.

No explanation of those over-charges has yet been vouchsafed. Really $118.08 for $54 worth of work is out of the question, and requires explanation. Perhaps a tender conscience will cause the $64.08 of over-charges to be refunded.

THE Census returns for the Dominion are still kept secret. Had not the Commissioners and Enumerators been sworn "to give no information" to any one, the result of the enumeration would have been announced pretty accurately by newspaper reporters ere this.

The Board of School Trustees for the village of Ashburnham, have advertised for tenders for enlarging their school house. They were not satisfied with the first tenders, believing even the lowest one high. They are trying to get the work at the cheapest possible rate.

John Sandfield has signalled himself of the work of last Session, providing for a few more Registry offices as retiring rate for his friends. The West Riding of Middlesex is set apart, and Mr. Blackburn, a thick and thin supporter, has received the appointment as reward for services rendered.

PERSONAL.—We learn that Capt. Wm. Kennedy, who went to Red River with the volunteers about a year ago, has received the appointment Registrar for the district, and of course will remain there. That is one citizen of Peterboro who has received a favor from the Manitoba Government. We wish him long enjoyment of his new position.

THE notorious Col. THE LATE FIRE:—We have been informed by those who were last in Mr. Tanner's building during the progress of the fire, that large quantity of costly furniture was consumed, there not being time to remove all. His household furniture too, was in great part consumed—on the latter he had no insurance, and on the whole stock only $1000.

THE Provincial Exhibition will be held at Kingston this year, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, September 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. The tickets are to be, first prize red; second, blue; third, yellow; fourth, white: extras green: highly commended, and recommended, white.

Heavy charges of cheating the people have been made against the mayor and council of New York City. Millions are said to have been squandered, and princely fortunes made by the "Ring." Almost the entire newspaper press of the city are represented as having been bribed into silence, the Herald receiving $60,000 a year to be mum; others a like proposition.

Mr. Hugh Allan, of Montreal, has received the honor of Knighthood, or of a Baronetcy from the Queen, for services rendered in extending the shipping interests of the Empire and of the Dominion. He is now Sir Hugh Allan of Ravenscrag, after the name of his residence near Montreal. He is a Scotchman by birth, and about sixty years of age, being born in 1810.

There is great excitement in Montreal on account of the Council of the City raising Officials salaries to amounts the people think unwarrantable. Large meetings have been held, and the citizens are determined to have matters changed. It is a fact often Councils are in the hands of "rings" which makes change to right management not an easy task.

"A Store keeper" asks us why the "Early Closing" movement is not made general, instead of being confined to the Dry Goods and Grocery houses, and urges that all should enter into the arrangement. If all did so, they would be as well off at the end of a year, as there would be about as much business done with the half holiday as if there were no holidays.

57TH BAND.—We understand it is their intention of the 57th Band to play out on the Market Square, to-morrow evening, (Friday), and weekly during the remainder of the season. The Band are obliged to play on the Square in preference to the Court House Park, on account of the light being available at the former place.

Once destroyed by an earthquake, and now completely burnt down, the town of Point-a-au-Petre, Guadaloupe, has a chequered history. The last calamity occurred on the 18th ult., when the town, being constructed entirely of wood, fell an easy prey to the flames. About 20,000 people are said to have been rendered houseless by this calamity, but no loss of life is reported.

On Sunday last, an explosion of the boiler of a steamboat took place at New York, killing at least 50 persons and scalding and bruising hundreds of others. At the time of the explosion there was on board a large excursion party, and reports represent the scene as appalling with the dead and wounded and the sorrow stricken friends.

PERSONAL.—We learn from the Blue Rapids Times that Mr. Gideon Fitzgerald, formerly of Peterboro, but now of Blue Rapids, has opened a Waggon and Carriage shop in the West. Kansas seems to be going ahead at a rapid rate. Blue Rapids is only two or three years old, so to speak, and already it has its local paper, and a very respectable one too—as the number now before us testifies.

THE FENIAN CONVICTS.—In the Kingston Penitentiary are receiving Royal Clemency—one by one they are being liberated and sent over to Uncle Sam again. Their stay in Canada will prove an important period in their history if it has taught them wisdom, and formed the desire to remain on the south side of 45. They set off at periods of ten days apart so that sweet counsel by the way is out of the question.

JOHN SANDFIELD AND DR. RYERSON.—Would the people of Ontario be surprised if John Sandfield McDonald should offer Dr. Ryerson a place in the Enlarged Cabinet? No. Would the people of Ontario be surprised if Dr. Ryerson should accept the offer? They wouldn't be surprised at any thing that may take place in politics. But nothing less than Dr. Ryerson and Bishop Lynch in the ship, can save it from foundering. The leak is too big to be stopped by ordinary means, while John Sandfield remains on board.

In to-days' issue two sets of Examination papers are given for the benefit of Teachers. An opportunity will be given to Teachers to ask questions concerning them, and to others to answer, over such questions, but discussion will not be allowed. Different answers may be proposed by any one, or explanations asked, but we wish it expressly understood that not a word tending to strife or contention will be admitted. We require the names of parties in all cases, but in no case will any name be made public. We are anxious that teachers should be benefitted, and all ill-feeling avoided.

On the 1st of August a post-office car and railway mail clerk were placed on the Midland Railway, and hereafter mails will be exchanged between the travelling post-offices and all the offices on the route between Port Hope and Beaverton. The arrangements are understood to be very satisfactory. A close connection will be made at Port Hope, morning and evening, with the mail trains passing east and west on the Grand Trunk Railway. Mr. Sweetman, the Post-Office Inspector, made a trip over the line to-day, to see that all the arrangements were carefully and correctly carried into effect.

CHEAP MUSIC.—It is seldom that cheapness is associated with merit and real value but we must make an exception in favor of PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY. This valuable works comes to us regularly each month, overflowing with choice new Music—some fifteen peices in every number. It is printed from 36 full-size music-plates, neatly bound, and sells for the modest sum of 50 cents. Volume VIII. began with the July number; and the publisher offers to send two copies—July and August—for 50 cents. Address J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York. Think of it! 30 pieces of good Music for 50 cents.

THE ROCHESTER MUSICAL TIMES.—This popular musical monthly, now in its third volume, is published in Rochester, N. Y., by the well known MUSIC Dealer Mr. J. P. SHAW, 43 State street; is edited by Mr. ALEX. BARNES, a practical teacher and choir conductor, and is afforded at the low price of $1.00 per annum, always in advance.

Each number contains two choice pieces of music, worth during the year from $7 to $10. It will contain all the current musical news of general interest, sketches, stories, incidents, biographies, and instructive article on musical topics of every description. An addition is published especially for Brass Bands, containing a Supplement of band music, arranged for twelve instruments, at $3.00 per annum. Specimen copies, 10 cts; with Supplement, 30 cents.

The Globe of yesterday gives the arrival of the Grand Trunk mail trains at Toronto, with the following results:

Under the first head we find, therefore, that out of 137 trains only six arrived "on time," whilst two were a few minutes "ahead of time." Of the remainder, only six were less than thirty minutes behind time: twenty-two were from half an hour to an hour behind time; twenty-eight were from one to two hours behind time; twelve were from two to three hours behind time—seven from three to four hours behind time; twenty-one from four to five hours behind time; eleven from five to six hours behind time; five from six to seven hours behind time; four from seven to eight hours behind time; nine from eight to nine hours behind time; one over nine, one over ten, one over eleven, and one twenty hours behind time!

By to-days Examiner our readers will see that the Town Council have taken the first steps towards providing a Steam Fire Engine, and also water works for this town. Some years ago the Water Works Company, of which, and connected with the Dickson Estate, the improvements of the present Town Council. If the advice of the writer of the time had been taken not less than $70,000 would have been squandered in what will be secured now for $12,000 or $15,000 at the most. It was owing to the strenuous efforts of the friends of economy that we were saved the extravagance and wasteful expenditure referred to, for no trouble was spared to secure the outlay. Now through the liberality of the Trustees and representatives of the Dickson Estate, a splendid water power and privilege can be obtained for $1.00 a year, by which a saving to the town in piping alone to the amount of $30,000 will be effected. The course the Committee may adopt is not yet known, but from the action of the Council on Monday, the offer of the Estate of Mr. Dickson is likely to be accepted.

A company can put a reservoir on the Court House Hill and by means of it supply water for domestic purposes, and for watering the streets, by which the cost of watering the streets would be lessened also.

An improved fire engine (steam), and the old one repaired, would then enable the citizens to rest securely, as fire could never gain much advantage. A Steam Fire Engine will discharge 500 to 700 gallons of water per minute, four streams can be used at once. The weight of the heaviest is about 5000 lbs when ready for service, and can be taken to any place in the town by 20 men. It requires about 7 to 10 minutes from starting the fire till the machine is in full operation, and sometimes much sooner. A stream of water can be thrown from 160 to 200 feet, and even 230 feet with good pressure—and from a 1¼ inch pipe. During a trial in Toronto the Steam Fire Engine worked through two branches, one with 600 feet, and the other with 1,100 feet. The water being thrown upwards of 80 feet through the long branch, and even with 1850ft of hose, the water was thrown over three story buildings. To urge the merits or demerits of any peculiar machine would be out of the question as the proof of the best is in trial; but there can be no doubt that an outlay of $1,000 or so in a first-class engine will be found to be no loss to the town. The Wafer Works of course cannot be built in a day or even a month, but a steam fire engine can be obtained at once, and it is hoped the committee will be as expeditious as possible; no one knows when or where another fire may break out.

A Hook and Ladder Company should, also, be formed. During the progress of the last two fires not even an old axe could be obtained to knock a fence or old shed out of the way, to prevent the extension of the flames. There should be some arrangements made by which this could be done, at the same time a proper person to give directions, lest wanton destruction of property might be caused. For a town that has suffered so much from fire, there is not much arrangements for extinguishing it.

Since writing the above we learn that a Hook and Ladder Company has been formed.

JOHN SANDFIELD OVERWORKED.—Lately, John Sandfield had abundance of time to traverse the country from one end to the other, lecturing, speech-making, grinding axes, &c. Not a word was uttered of over-work, or work left undone.—The Election, however, has proved adverse to Coalition interests, and the demagogue quakes. The Cabinet is too weak; more influence is needed to retain the hold on the surplus, and to manipulate the outlay. Now we find a combination of "over-work." Two new Cabinet offices to be created, and of course two new men to fill them selected. This is the way J. S. proposes to get out of the present dilemma. Anything to draw more power to the grinding stone. The truth is, John Sandfield and Company are unfit for the management of public business, and the Country has pronounced the verdict of unfitness by leaving him in the minority, as he well knows will be the case when the House meets. To-morrow the evil day, it was boasted that enough Grits could be purchased to go over to the enemy and thus secure the sweets of office for four years longer. The martyrdom of the last parliament and the rejection of nearly all the victims at the polls, affords a lesson too useful to be rejected, or lightly thought of. John Sandfield has not secured his prey, and is not likely to secure it by bribery. He therefore sets to work to increase the number of Ministers, so that, if possible, a sufficient number of followers could be secured to elect their speaker. The Worthy Chief Superintendent of Education is spoke of as one of he new men. This is altogether likely a mere feeler to try the pulse of Ontario, and of the body that Mr. Ryerson claims to represent. We can hardly believe that the Doctor's ambition would lead him to betake himself to politics. He is too much wrapt up in the work of his office. But the hint may be merely to feel how well such a selection would take with the people. A Minister of Education would be a nice thing in the combination bureau—and perhaps might be the means of enlarging the field of usefulness of the department John Sandfield does not care an iota about the Doctor, or any one but himself; his past history proves that. And should he succeed in his present desperate circumstances by using the Chief Superintendent, it will only ward off the evil day for a short time.

HOW MONEY IS MADE IN TEXAS.—Why young men are looking out for something that will pay, we will give a few facts from a friend of ours living six or eight miles northeast of Houston, Mr. Norworthy. He employs from five to seven hands, averages about seven to proform his work. He has over 20,000 cabbage heads which will more clear of all expences, about ten cents a head, $2,000. He will raise about $4,000 worth of turnips and sweet potatoes. He will raise wtaermellons to clear $3,000 on the Besides this he has other things growing in smaller quantitie, so that an ordinary season his profits will bring him clear of all expences at least over $10,000. He cultivates about fifteen or twenty acres. Last year he raised three successive crops on the same ground. We give these figures from memory and they may vary from facts a little, but the result, over $10,000 clear we state accurately. A man can make money in Texas. There is plenty more such land as that our friend Norworthy cultivates, and as convient to mill, and half such a yield would pay well.—Baptist Herald.

A game of Cricket was played in Lindsay, on Thursday last, 27th July, between the "Shamrocks" of Peterboro, Ont., of this place, and the Lindsay Cricket Club, which resulted in a victory for Tuesday of June. The game was a closely contested one, and the playing of both clubs was excellent. The return match will be played in a few weeks. The following is the score:

Town Council.

The Council met on Monday evening.

Present—Messrs. Smith, English, Lundy, Doherty, Henthorn, Tool, Rutherford, Edmison.—Mr. Stephenson presiding.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

Petitions were read from James Clotworthy, complaining of injury done to lot No. 1, south of Edinburgh street, by a gravel pit, and asking compensation therefor.

From N Shaw and others, asking a sidewalk on Steward Street. Both petitions were referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

A petition from Dr. Burrett, and others, complaining of a gravel sidewalk on the north side of Murray street, and asking for plank instead of gravel, was read and submitted, when on motion, Dr. Burrett was heard before the Council in reference thereto.

A communication from J. T. Henthorn, and 21 others, was read, requesting the Council to institute an inquiry into the cause of the late fires on Hunter street.

Accounts from A. Dobbin $3. and from Thos. Collins, for pails at fires, $9.50, were referred to the finance committee.

The committee having written to the Trustees of the Dickson Estate, the following is the communication and the reply:—

To Robert Nichols and Wm. Hall, Esqrs. Trustees of the Dickson Estate.

SIRS,—

The Town Council are desirous of establishing Water Works in the Town, and wish to procure a sufficient Water Power for the purpose at the Dickson Dam, and the committee charged with the duty of negotiating in the matter, request from you, information on the following points:

1. Upon what terms will you grant to the Town Council a lease for 21 years (renewable for a like term, upon terms to be fixed by arbitration in the ordinary way) of a site, with proper access thereto, at the south end of the dam where the railroad cut-work touches the dam, for a two storey brick building, 18ft. x 24ft. for the purpose of a pump house for the intended water works, with water power from the dam for working said pump, and the right to lay down and keep the necessary pipings, and the right of access thereto, for repairs and otherwise. The power supplied to be equal to at least 100 horse power, it being understood that the power is to be used only for fire purpose within the Corporation limits, taking into consideration the probability of the limits being extended.

2. If it is determined that the power shall be used for supplying water for domestic use, and for watering the streets, what will the terms be?

(Signed) J. STEVENSON.

On behalf of the committee.

Peterboro, July 27th, 1871.

REPLY.

James Stevenson, Esq.,

SIR,—

In reply to your communication on behalf of the Town Council regarding a site for building and water power sufficient to drive a pump in connection with water works to be erected for the purpose of supplying water for the purpose of extinguishing fires in the Town, we beg to say we would grant a lease for the term of twenty-one years on condition that a pipe of proper dimensions be laid between London and Hunter Streets along the Mill Race, and a sufficient number of Hydrants to be used in case of fire for the buildings, mills and factories, now erected or to be erected along said race, and one Hydrant on London Street at the western limit of mill reserve, and for the nominal rent of one dollar per year. And should water be required for domestic and other purposes, then we would be willing to leave the additional rental to arbitration mutually chosen by the Dickson Estate and the Town. Hoping these terms may prove satisfactory,

We are, Sirs,
Yours respectfully,
R. NICHOLS,
WM. HALL.

Peterboro, July 28th, 1871.

P. S.—1 Hydrant between Grieve Hill and Woolen Factory would be all that is required at present.

Moved by Mr. Smith, seconded by Mr. English.—That the president of this Council comply with the petition of Mr. Henthorn, and issue his order for an investigation as to the cause of the fires on Hunter street.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Smith, seconded by Mr. English,—That the communication from the Executors of the Dixon Estate, be referred to the Fire Committee. That this Council are of opinion that their offer is liberal, entitling them to the thanks of the ratepayers, and should be accepted on behalf of this Council.—Carried

Mr. Smith, as chairman of the Fire Committee, said that the committee were unable to report progress in the matter of the Steam Fire Engine, as they had not received answers from some of the manufactures written to

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

The purchase system in the British Army has been done away with. The Lords are indignant—what will their worth lessons do in future?

MR. GLADSTONE'S ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Gladstone, who was received with cheers, said the attention of the Government had been especially directed to the question. It was a case in which there was now officially known to exist systematic and habitual violations of the law, and the Government consider that such a case stood in a category totally different from one of ordinary legislation, and especially from a simple measure of a legislative scheme which had miscarried in either House of Parliament. He would first state what he considered the House of Lords to have done when the seconding reading of the Army bill was moved. An amendment was proposed which stated that the House was unwilling to assent to the second reading until it had certain information before it. The amendment was carried, but the effect of carrying the amendment was not to reject or destroy the bill, but simply to set aside the second reading on the particular occasion when it was proposed, leaving it open to proceed with the second reading and other stages of the bill subsequently. The question of purchase was a question which by statute was taken out of the hands of Legislature. As for me regarded the proper and legitimate character of purchase it was enacted that that description of purchase and that only should be legal in the army which it may please Her Majesty to appoint by regulations contained in royal warrants. The effect of this was that by an act of the Legislature the existence of purchase was made, as far as the warrant and the legal basis of purchase was concerned, to depend on the action of the Executive Government, while as regarded the indemnification of the officers that part of the subject belonged to the House of Commons. But although that was the case the government would not have considered it reasonably within their competency to take any vital step in regard to purchase without having recourse to the opinion of the House of Commons. That assurance the Government had made, and they had obtained the solemn judgement of the House against the continuance of purchase. It was not necessary, therefore, that they should solicit the House for a declaration which had already been obtained in the most perfect manner. This being so, they had before them the locality of the over regulation prices and the declaration of the Royal Commission that these over-regulation prices could not be put an end to unless by the extinction of the practice. As a step to this state of things Her Majesty's Government at once resolved to take the decisive step of cancelling the warrant under which purchase was held. That advice had been accepted and acted upon by Her Majesty. A new warrant would be framed in terms as favorable to the law as that of the government at purchase in the army no longer existed. It would cease on the 1st november in the present year, from and after which there could be no purchase or sale of commissions. The state of circumstances under which the resolution of Monday last was passed in the House of Lords was thus entirely altered. It was not for the Government to say what course the House of Lords in those circumstances might think fit to pursue. They, of course, trusted they august assembly would be disposed to proceed with the second reading and the other stages of the bill. They had in view in considering the matter simply dispatch and the observance of constitutional duty; the speedy termination of a state of suspense injurious to the army, and lastly, a hope of the progress of a measure which, in their judgement, was likely to do full justice to the fair pecuniary claims of the officers of the army, and the loss of which in right possibly made it difficult to find other means as effectual, and certain of doing justice to the officers claims, they to give time to allow them to learn the case, if the Lords were disposed to take it. In respect to the remaining stages of the bill, it was not to be becoming or appropriate for him to state which course they should take if they failed to prosecute the bill to its conclusion; but however it was his duty to state, on the part of the Government, that come what might, and under all circumstances, they would use the best means in their power, mindful of the honorable pledges they had given, to secure at the hands of Parliament just and liberal terms for the officers of the army.

About a year ago an affray occured in the township of Huntly, in which Hugh Dorning was killed by his brother John. The two brothers were at work threshing in a barn, when they quarrelled over the final drink of whiskey in a bottle. They were both considerably under the influence of liquor at the time. Hugh succeeded in hiding the bottle, and John, after searching for it, and finally attacked his brother to force him to deliver up the object of contention. Hugh ran away,—John following him. After running about among the buildings for a few moments, John dealt his unfortunate brother a blow with the handle of a pitchfork, which proved fatal. John was arrested, but escaped by the assistance of a relative. Nothing since has been heard of the murderer until a few days ago when his corpse was brought back to the town. It seems he went to some isolated Irish farm, where he worked; but the manner of his death is not yet known.

2. Prove that a vulgar fraction will produce a finite decimal, or a pure circ. decimal; or a mixed, circ decimal according as its denominator has only the factors 2, 10, none of such factors, either taken along and that the number of finite figures will be equal to the greatest number of equal factors, 2 or 5, in the denominator.
3. State the different gains in precentage. To each of a class of 6 pupils 300 questions were proposed: the 1st answered 275, the 2nd 260, the 3rd 240, the 4th 200, the 5th 210, the 6th 180; what was the standing of the class?
4. In building a house, I paid 2½ times as much for material as for labor; had the latter cost 8 per cent more, and the former 10 per cent more, the whole cost would have been $2872.50; find the actual cost.
5. A merchant consigns a quantity of flour to an agent in Montreal, who charges 2½ per cent. com. for selling, and 3½ per cent for buying, with instructions to invest the proceeds, after deducting his commission, for both transactions) in certain goods; the agent sells the flour at $6.25 a bbl., and invests as directed, his entire commission being $435.00¼; how many bbls. flour were consigned?
6. Define the terms Company, Corporation Charter, Firm, Joint Stock, Scrip. I had $8000 Bank of Toronto stock; when at a premium of 9½ a new issue of stock was ordered, giving to each Stockholder at a premium of 5%, half as many shares as he already possessed; the market value of the stock then declined 15 5-8 13%. How much did I gain or lose by not selling out before the new issue?
7. Define the terms Insurance, Underwriter, Policy, Premium. For what sum must I insure property at 1½% to cover a loss of $3393.3?
8. Distinguish between colonial and specific duties. The duty on imported goods at 26% was $128, an allowance of 15% having been made at the Custom House for damage sustained by the goods after shipment. What was the invoice (cost) of goods?
9. "The course of exchange on England is usually given with reference to the old par of exchange." Explain this statement; show that when sterling is quoted at 9½ premium, it is really at par according to present standard. A Bill of Exchange on Dublin for £720, cost $3422; find the course of exchange.
10. What relative quantities of sugar at 7 cents, 8 cents, 11 cents, and 13 cents, must be sold to realize an average price of 10 cents? Give reasons for your solution.
11. The three sides of a triangle are 30, 40, 48; find the segments into which the perpendicular from upon it falls on the vertical angle.
12. If it cost $75 to inclose a circular pond containing 3 A. 2 R. 6 P., how much will it cost to inclose one of 35 A. 1 R and 20 P?

5. What is ozone? Give its properties and modes of production.
6. Give the principal properties of H, and mention any of the modes of its preparation when K, acts on water, state and fully explain the equation representing the chemical position.
7. Give the co efficient of the expansion of gases. A volume of 800 cubic feet of gas at a temperature of 25° C. has its temperature increased to 45° C. Find the alteration in its volume.
8. Give the symbol and combining weight of Silicon. How does it occur in nature and how may it be obtained? Describe the silicic known oxide of Silicon.

The first Orange procession ever seen in North West marched through the streets of Winnipeg on the 12th inst. They had banners and were the regalia of the Order, but had no band. About one hundred members mustered.

Notice is given that application will be made to Parliament for power to alter and condemn that a line of railway from Omemee to Peterborough, thence north to intersect the Canada Central Railway, in connection with the Midland Railway of Canada, by lease or otherwise.

A remarkable illustration of the power of modern science to wrestle spoil from the deathe of the ocean is now afforded at Galle Head on the Irish coast, off which point the "Crescent City" sunk some months ago. The diving operations have been so conducted that $10,432 in specie have been recovered, together with four hundred and sixty bales of cotton, valued at $11 per bale. It is expected that the whole of a valuable cargo, both of specie and cotton, will be recovered.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner

SIR.—Please give this communication a place in your paper. It was my intention to have gone on a prospecting expidition this summer, but severe sickness in my family prevented me from making any preparations so far as doing, but next spring I hope to be able to make an early start.

Contrary to the predictions of the knowing ones, a rich silver mine has been discovered on Lake Superior, from which, according to all accounts, over two million dollars worth of silver will be taken this year. Last year I was frequently told that it was a wild goose chase, to go in search of gold or silver, for there were no minerals in Canada.

I take this opportunity of returning my sincere thanks to the liberal minded men in Peterboro that did give a little to have the country prospected. I do not wish to hurt any ones feelings, but I will say this much, that no man situated as I was, could accomplish much. I was compelled to return before we got to the part of the country we intended to prospect.

To make anything by mining, the only plan is to keep prospecting until a rich lode is discovered. Having to make a poor mine pay, is like working a poor farm. He cannot run work at it that wants to run fast.

There is every probability that there are as rich, or richer, mines than those discovered on Lake Superior, if such is the case it is better to keep exploring for years than to have anything to do with a poor mine, trying to make poor lodes has been the ruination of mining in Canada so far, no matter if it is a thousand miles north of this, a rich mine will pay.

If a company could be formed I would like to stand a part to prospect the country back of Lake Superior.

Strict Poetry.

The Old Homestead.

Ah! here it is, that dear old place,
Unchanged through all these years;
How like some sweet, familiar face
My childhood's home appears!
The gnarled old trees beside the door
Still spread their branches wide,
The river winds as of yore,
With steady murmuring tide;
The distant hills look green and gray,
The flowers are blooming wild,
And everything looks glad to-day,
As when I was a child.

Regardless how the years have flown,
Glad wandering I stand
I catch no frost, enduring tone,
I chase no friendly hand;
I think my mother's smile to meet,
I list my father's call,
I pause to hear my brother's feet,
Come bounding through the hall!
But silence all around me reigns,
A chill creeps through my heart—
No token of them I here remains,
All were from home start.

What though the heritage fall to fair,
What though the building decays
Still clad their fragrance on the air,
While life's golden hours?
The feeling over that gathering
Shall still nestle memory;
Behind that door yon thief me
Will greet my look no more.
And yet I quit the dear old place
With slow and lingering tread,
As when we kiss a clay-cold face,
And leave it with the dead.

HENRY OWENS,

April 14th George Street, Peterboro.

A Successful Fire Insurance Company.

[illegible] VALUE OF THE SHARES IS NOW $125 PER SHARE.

The following is an extract from the annual report of the Agricultural Insurance Company, of Watertown, N. Y., as published by the Watertown, January 11, 1871:—

"Business—This year past should has been a disastrous one for Fire Insurance Companies generally throughout the country. The number of very heavy losses and large claims (from sufferers to whom we have heretofore issued policies) have been heavily felt by us. Our losses by fire during the year just ended, foot up [illegible] amount [illegible] exceeding the receipts, nearly $100,000 [illegible] several large claims, with a possible success [illegible] this. The business of our Company being confined to farm property and detached residences, our losses by lightning were very large, [illegible] others of any Company. We have paid during the year 141 losses by lightning alone. Our entire losses for the year were $162,220.01, an increase of about $60,000 over any previous year. But notwithstanding the large increase in our losses, the increase in our business has enabled us to add about the usual average amount to our surplus. It may not be out of place to here take a retrospect of our business for the last eight years:—

Jan. 1st, 1863,	the amount of our surplus above capital stock was	$ 45,572 79
1864,	it was increased to the sum of	67,207 66
1865		103,677 17
1866		139,221 35
1867		207,022 04
1868		253,126 39
1869		296,068 66
1870		367,714 73
1871		441,286 57

This last amount, $441,286.57, with our capital of $100,000.00, make our assets at this date $541,286.57. It has been our rule in the past to make a dividend to our Shareholders to the amount only of our interests aside profit. I think this policy wise, and should be adhered to in the future. The interest and rents of the Company for the past year amount to the sum of $20,327.30. I would recommend that a dividend of 20 per cent upon the capital stock of the company be declared, which will only exceed the amount received for interests and rents to the sum of $12.70.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The above most favorable report must satisfy the most incredulous that the Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N. Y., is the strongest and most reliable Company doing business in Canada. It has deposited with the Receiver General of Canada $100,000.00. It will accept only non-hazardous risks. It will only insure detached residences in towns and villages, and farming property. If never can insure to exceed $6,000 in one fire, so in taking larger risks they immediately reinsure the difference in some other good Company. Its rates are the lowest of any Company in the Dominion. It is a purely Farmers' stock Company, and every $100 of its stock is worth $300, being over twice as much as that of any other Fire Insurance Company doing business in Canada.

Mr. W. A. Kirk is agent for this Company at Peterborough.

The County of Frontenac has granted a bonus of $150,000 in aid of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway.

At a meeting of the Toronto and Nipissing Railway Company on the 25th, a further issue of $150,000 of first mortgage bonds was authorized.

The shadows of the mind are like those of the body. In the morning of life they lie behind us; at noon we trample them under our feet; and in the evening they stretch long and deepening shadows before us.

We are to work and learn. Life should have its quiet pauses, in which to gather rest for work, but no idle hours. The poor are to be ministered unto, the wicked to be reclaimed, and the sorrowing to be comforted.

It is very beautiful to see how the God who has bound this world into a great harmony by its very diversity has arranged for the same end in his church, by giving to [illegible] their different [illegible]

A boy named Phillip Manning, only ten years old, stole a flask of brandy belonging to his mother last Saturday, and became so much intoxicated by drinking the stuff that he fell and broke his collar bone. He was taken to his home on Havelock street, where Dr. Ingalls attended him.

THE LAST QUESTION.—A little Sabbath-school boy, on his death-bed, was urging his drunken father to love the Saviour; and, fearing he had made no impression, said, "Father, I am going to heaven! What shall I tell Jesus is the reason why you don't love him?" The father burst into tears; but before he could give the answer, his dear boy had fallen asleep in death. We hope the question sunk deeply in his heart, causing him to renounce bad habits, and love the Saviour who died for all.

A BRAVE BOY.—A little boy, a member of the Band of Hope, recently met with an accident. A horse kicked him very severely over the eye, and he was nearly run over. A policeman took him home to his mother, and suggested that she give him some brandy to keep him from fainting. Hearing what was said, he refused to take any, because he thought he would be breaking his pledge. I hope other boys and girls will follow the noble example of this little man in miniature, who puts to blush many of riper years who have signed the pledge and broken it many times.

'A pleasant instance of poetic justice,' says an exchange, 'is reported from a town in Oregon. One morning a young man called upon the editor of the only paper in the county, and asked permission to look at the file of that paper for 1869. It was granted. While the editor was in bed, waiting till his wife could wash his shirt, the young man carried away the file, nor was it ever seen again, until his lawyer offered it in evidence during an action of $5,000 damages for an alleged libel, which that young man brought against the editor. It is gratifying to learn that the plaintiff recovered 6¼ cents damages, and was arrested by the editor on a charge of stealing books, convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for seven years.'

Many persons have lately been anxiously examining the maps to find the 'seat of war.' Fubbs says that he found it last summer without a map. He discovered it sitting down upon a wasp's nest in a hayfield.

'Look here, Pete,' said a knowing darkey to his companion, 'don't stan' on the railroad.' 'Why, Joe?' 'Kase of de cars see dat mouf of yours, day will took it an do depot and run into it.'

'Boy,' said an ill tempered old fellow to a noisy lad, 'what are you hetteria for when I go by?' 'Hemph,' replied the boy, 'what are you going by for when I'm hetterin?' This reply settled the old man's temper.

A Maine man going into the wilderness took what he supposed to be his compass, but found, when he needed its guidance he had instead taken his wife's daguerreotype. It brought him out all right.

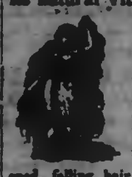
A story was told of an editor who died, went to Heaven; but was denied admittance lest he would start some delinquent subscribers, and lead failings be engendered in that peaceful clime. Having to go somewhere the Editor next appointed to the regions of darkness, but was positively refused admittance, as the place was full of delinquent subscribers. Wearily, the editor turned back to the Celestial city, was met by the watchman at the portals with a smile, who said; "I was mistaken; you can enter; there is not a delinquent subscriber in Heaven.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.



Dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

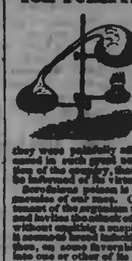
Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.



The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is earned from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of the human race. Once, like a secret tenant of the serpentine undermines the constitution, and invites the subtlest of controlling or fatal diseases, without any suspicion of its presence. Again, it accumulates around certain portions of the body, and there, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tuberculos may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla in scrofulous cases when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints usually find immediate relief, and, in general, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions of visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Pills, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous system.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the worst cases. Ulcers, Tumors, or Kidney Complaints are relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Languor, Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the resulting poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections [illegible] of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well-known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season, seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Pains or Soreness in the Chest and Side, Bleeding at the Lungs, Liver Complaint, &c.

by a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

BE WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY does not dry up a Cough, and leave the causes behind, as is the case with most cough preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs, and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

SLINGSHOT, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

and all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

Beware of Counterfeits.

Remember that the genuine "Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry" is never sold in bulk or by the gallon, and has the written signature of "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON," on the wrapper, carefully before purchasing.

MANUFACTURERS OF THE CELEBRATED

LOCKMAN SEWING MACHINE,

Take pleasure in announcing that the popularity of the Sewing Machine manufactured by them is still on the increase. They are now turning them out at the rate of 600 per month and yet have been compelled within the last two weeks to increase their facilities to a capacity of one thousand per month.

The Lockman Machine, from its capacity to sew the heaviest fabrics with linen thread, as well as the finest cambrics with No. 150 Cotton, is pre-eminently the Farmer's Favorite Family Friend.

It is so exceedingly simple in its parts, and so strongly and durably made, that it does not require a mechanical genius for its management.

The manufacturers challenge the world to produce its equal, and yet its price is from Forty to Fifty per cent. Lower than that of any other first-class Shuttle Lock-stitch Sewing Machine.

EVERY MACHINE IS WARRANTED.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing Spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

Select Poetry.

Is there room in Angel Land.

(These lines were written after hearing the following touching incident related by a minister; A mother, who was preparing some flour to bake into bread, left it for a moment, when little Mary with childish curiosity to see what it was, took hold of the dish, when it fell to the floor, spilling the contents. The mother struck the child a severe blow, saying with anger, that she was always in the way! Two weeks after, little Mary sickened and died. On her death-bed, while delirious, she asked her mother if there would be room for her among the angles. 'I was always in your way, mother; you had no room for Mary! And will I be in the angel's way? Will they have room for me?' The broken-hearted mother then felt no sacrifice too great could she save her child.)

Is there room among the angles
For the spirit of your child?
Will they take your little Mary
In their loving arms so mild?
Will they ever love me fondly,
As my story books have said?
Will they find a home for Mary—
Mary numbered with the dead?
Tell me truly, darling mother,
Is there room for such as me?
Will I gain the home of spirit.
And the shining angles see?

I have sorely tried you, mother—
Been to you a constand care,
And you will not miss me, mother,
When I dwell among the fair;
For you have no room for Mary!
She was ever in your way,
And she fears the good will shun her.
Will they, darling mother say?
Tell me—tell me truly—mother.
Ere life's closing hour doth come,
Do you think that they will keep me,
In the shining angels' home?

I was not so wayward, mother,
Not so very, very bad.
But that tender love would nourish,
And make Mary's heart so glad!
Oh! I yearned for pure affection,
In this world of bitter woe
And I long for bliss immortal,
In the land where I must go,
Tell me once again, dear mother,
Ere you take the parting kiss,
Will the angles bid me welcome,
To that land of perfect bliss?

A Confession.

BY A VERY OLD MAN.

Most men would hesitate at telling such a story of themselves. But I am convinced that it will afford a suggestion of mercy toward such as do fall, and some may be turned away from temptation by its recital.

I had been an under clerk in a large establishment for many years. Naturally economical, my savings had attained to such a sum that I ventured on married life, quite as much as a refuge from the monotony of my inexpensive style of living as in obedience to those yearnings of nature which a man is very foolish or very bad not to heed in due season. Like most men, however, I found that adventures of this kind are not always followed by the comfort and ease which depend on money for their possession. In the course of time I came to repent the undertaking, for I was in debt, my family had increased, while my income had not kept pace with my expences My wife lacked the courage to practice the self denial which would be consequent upon a retrenchment of our expences. I was daily annoyed by duns. I had borrowed money in every available quarter, and a walk in the public street was literally denied me by the fear of encountering some one to whom I was indebted for my house expenses.

Returning home late one night, jaded by a listless stroll through the town, I found the junior member of the firm waiting for me. The house had received intelligence, after business hours, of a transaction entered into on their account, which required the immediate transmission to an insolated town of several thousand dollars, together with certain papers and statements necessary to conclude the whole transaction. It was too important a matter to be intrusted to the delay and uncertainty of the mail at the time Upon a consultation of the members of the two days' journey. I accepted the mission with alacrity, for the reason among others, that it would be such a recreation as would divert my thoughts for a time from the perplexities of my miserable condition.

With the usual foresight of the firm, every thing necessary to my prompt departure had been pre-arranged. The needful papers and accounts, and the indispensable money requisite to finish the transaction were placed in my hands in an envelope addressed to to the gentleman who had acted as agent for the concern in the matter. A letter of instructions was likewise enclosed.

I remember well the bright September morning on which I started on horseback, and alone on my journey of which I accomplished half the first day, arriving at a farm house where accepting an unhesitating granted my petition for a share for the night, in its humble hospitality.

The weather had grown colder as the evening came on, and by the time I reached the house I experienced a sensible chill. I had with me a flask of liquor, and was flurnished at my request, at bed time, with a small quantity of hot water with which to compound a sort of punch, as an antidote to the cold I apprehended having taken.

I had removed the package of money from my pocket and laid it on the table, with a view of putting it under my pillow, when going to bed. As it lay on the table the address was uppermost, on the left hand upper corner was a memorandum. "$5,000 enclosed." I was standing with my back to the door. Succeeding a few minutes of entire silence, I heard a step behind me, and I almost think a breath upon my face.—Turning suddenly round I beheld my hosts with the hot water I had called for in a tumbler in his hand. He was quite beside me, and his eyes rested on, or I fancied they rested, on the package on the table. I must confess I was sensibly startled by this accident My concern was not diminished by observing that he had removed his boots from his feet, and was standing as he had come up, in his stockings. My first impulse and act was to take the water out of his hand. Not being quite ready to use it I put the envelope of money on top of it, as the most convient thing to keep it hot. I did not turn the superscription downward because I feared it would betray the suspicion which I now positively entertained of evil intentions on the part of my entertainer, who had quitted the room as noiselessly as he had entered; I imagined a good many things which he could have become acquainted with the cause of my journey, and came rapidly to the conclusion that my employers' funds were in danger. That they accidentally so became evident before the door had passed. I recalled the man's countenance vividly to my recollection and pictured from memory his features, so as to form a fair estimate of the character with which I had to deal. Physically he was more than my equal. When I alighted at the house it struck me I had seen him before, and after some moments of further and renewed recollection, I distinctly recalled him to my mind as a merchant who had dealt with our firm during my early connection with it, and had failed through the dishonesty of friends whom he had helped. I concentered him as having been capable of being dishonest with trade, and having failed in the wilderness with his family, and turned a living literally by the point of his knife.

There were but two bedrooms in the house both on the same floor, a passage which communicated at the head of the stair dividing them. Whilst the thoughts which I have related were passing through my mind, I heard voices in the other bedroom, and quietly opened my door which my host had closed behind him. Standing out in the passage, I could distinguish a man's and woman's voice. At first their language was unintelligible, but gradually my ear became accustomed to the duties I endeavoured to put it to, and I could distinguished that the burden of their talk was their domestic expenses, and the general current of their thoughts was the difficulty of getting through with certain undertakings which they had in contemplation or had commenced. It was evident the man was more hopeful than the woman. My excited imagination at once framed the theory that the treasury in my possession was designed by them to solve this difficulty, and that the reluctant man was being urged on by the less scrupulous or braver woman.

A sudden movement of one them toward the door caused me to retreat into my room. I heard the bolt of the door moved and supposing it was to unlatch it, I hurried back to my own appartment, and caught at the envelope, intending to hasten it out of sight. In my eagerness to grasp it, it fell tumbling with the watered silk uppermost and opened! The waiters had been so far dissolved by the heat and moisture as to split in two, leaving one half of each (three in all) on the flap, and the other half of each on the body of the envelope. Meanwhile there was no sign or sound of inroad into my room, of which I had seen it was impossible to fasten the door, save by moving some of the furniture against it, I became convinced as yet everything was safe and yielding to a feeling of curiosity I drew the money from the inclosure and counted it over. There were ten one thousand dollar bills! I was so astounded and for the time forgot the fear that so recently harrassed me. I looked at the memorandum on the back of the envelope. It was "$5,000." The letter was open before me. I read it over it named five thousand as the sum enclosed. There was evidently an error I counted it over again. Ten thousand dollars was before me! Again and again I counted it. I had been used to handling large sums, and counting large sums of money daily; but I actually found more difficulty as arriveng at the second count of the ten bank bills before me, than I ever before or since encountered in counting any sum, however large, or however numerous the notes. Finally putting a chair against the door, I spread the notes singally on the little table, in a row, and counted them with my finger. Then made two rows of five notes each, and again counted them; I finally, though slowly, became satisfied that I had In my possession double the amount of money I was expected to deliver to my employer's agent. Temptation entered my soul. Five thousand dollars would relieve me of all my debts. Here it was within my grasp. I had but to seal up the envelope by re-wetting the waters, inclose but half the money, and deliver it sealed to the agent, and my trust would be, to all appearance, faithfully discharged. Once the thought occured that possibly it was a trap set for me by my employers. But their confidence in me was undoubted, and the suspicion was framed only to be dismissed. I do not attempt to glaze over the dishonesty of what I had contemplated. But I had been so uncessingly worried and annoyed by domestic troubles arising from limited resources, and persecuted by creditors, that I almost argued myself into the conviction that appropriating the money was simply authorized self-defence, I would simply pay all my debts, get clear of the world once more,—insuring on my wife's adopting my views of living—save money—get into business for myself—and finally pay back the money.

I concluded to leave the envelope untasened until morning so as to give myself that much more time before deciding upon an act which all my arguments with myself had not made entirely reconcilable. Arrived at this conclusion, my attention again turned to my hosts and his wife. I could hear his voice alone now. It had been sounding alone in a room what elevated tone for some moments. I crept quietly to the partition dividing their apartment from the passage. The bright autumn moon, which was on their side of the house, shone through their window and through the space between the shrunken planks on the partition and out into the passage in brilliant bars of light. It was easy for me to see what was passing within the room Man and wife was kneeling at their bedside in prayer. The man with upilled head and closed eyes, uttering an earnest supplication, his wife beside him, and one arm passed affectionately through one of his, and her head resting against his shoulder. They were kneeling at the side of the bed opposite me, and his face was plainly visible. Its calm and pious expression was sufficient rebuke to my unjust suspicions. I began to hear him say: "Pardon, O merciful Father, not only the sins of thy humble servant and his household, but turn the hearts of those who have done evil unto him, who have wished him injury, and who have harboured unjust suspicions of him. Bless such, O Lord, and preserve them in order that they may turn from their ways and seek the path of righteousness.

In serious, earnest and manly words struck a chord in my heart, not only in sympathy with the honest and tender supplication that was passing from his lips, but of contrition for the wrong I had done him by my suspicions. I involuntary compared him, whatever were his good or bad deeds, at least an humble penitent, before his God, with the wretch I had decided, but a few moments ago to make of myself, by the misappropriation of my employers money, and still haunted, however, by the relief it could obtain for me, would not quite give way to the feeling of repentance which was knocking for admission at my breast. I had half decided to turn away and drive there better thoughts from mind, when I observed something moving in a small crib that was placed at the side and toward the foot of their bed. Its occupant, a grand-child, whose parent they had informed me were dead, awakened probably by its grandfather's voice rose up, looked around, and seated down upon upon its knees, and clasping its little hands as its grandfather's were clasped, and looking upwards, out through the window at the moon, whose bright light fell upon its darling face, began moving its lips as if trying to repeat the words. Nothing so like an angel ever met my sight. The grandfather began the child's prayer. The little fellow seemed to have this by heart. He repeated it word for word, his tiny silvery voice sounding in sweet accord. I could not turn away, nor any longer resist the better emotions which I had hitherto kept down. A rush of repentant feeling passed through me with an effect that shook every fibre. I fell upon my knees, and with tears streaming from my eyes, joined in the concluding words of the prayer.

I need not say I changed my mind with regard to the money. I passed a quiet night and rose early, hieing away toward my journey's end, so as to give myself the least possible time or opportunity for changing my new formed resolution. In handing the package to the agent, I said to him, that as there was money in it, it might be well he counted in my presence, to see that all was correct, &c. He of course discovered the error, and handed me back the amount that was over, with which I reserved home and delivered it up to the proper owner in due time.

It was fortunate for me in every way that I pursued the course I had adopted. It had appeared that the money had been obtained from the bank after bank hours, in the absence of the teller, from one of the officers. There was no loose notes on hand of the large denominations, but there were sheets of thousands and five hundreds signed by the president and cashier. Either two sheets were packed up in mistake for one, or the wrong pack of sheets selected from—that is thousands were selected instead of five hundreds. The notes were hurriedly clipped, strapped and endorsed "$5,000," without recounting, and so enveloped and handed over to me. The bank had discovered the error, and no doubt was entertained but that the missing money was with me. Whether I should have had the face to withstand the imputation of the envelope in my favor, is more than I can say, but I doubt it.

But the notes, in pursuance of a precaution still in use in some of the banks, were payable to one of the clerks, and had not been endorsed by him. I could not, therefore, have used them, or if so, they could have been traced back to me. I found, also, that the number had been carefully ascertained of all I had taken with me, and thus another chance of detection existed. What an escape!

My precaution of having the money opened by the agent in my presence was highly commended, and the possibility of his misappropriating the undue amount—as very little personal knowledge of him was possessed by the firm—was duly discussed.—What was said on this point brought blushes to my cheek.

In course of time my senior accountant was taken into the firm. I was put in his position, and with his salary. I saved money finally got into business on my own account, and am now, as you know, rich. I never forgot my former host and his grandchild; but at the death of the former I took charge of the boy. He is now my partner and the husband of my daughter.

BOYS AS FARMERS.

Boys in general would be very good farmers, if the current notions about farming were not so very different from those they entertain. What passes for laziness is very often an unwillingness to farm in a particular way. For instance:—Some morning in early summer, John is told to catch the sorrel mare, harness her into the spring waggon and put in the buffalo and best whip, for father is obliged to drive over to the Corners, "to see a man" about some cattle, to talk with the Road Commissioner, to go to the store for the "women folks," and to attend to other important business; and very likely he will not be back till sundown. It must be very pressing business, for the old gentleman drives off in this way some where almost every pleasant day, and appears to have a great deal on his mind.

Meantime, he tells John that he can play ball, after he has done up the chores. As it is the chores could ever be "done up" on a farm. He is first to clean up the horse-stable; then he takes a hill-hook and cuts down the weeds from the fence corners in in the home mowing-lot and along the road toward the village; to dig up the docks round the garden patch; to weed out the beet-bed; to hoe the early potatoes, to rake the sticks and leaves out of the front yard; in short, there is work enough laid out for John to keep busy, it seems to him, till he comes of age; and at half an hour to sundown he is to go for the cows, and mind he don't run 'em!

"Yes, sir," says John, "is that all?"

"Well, if you get through in good season you might pick over those potatoes in the cellar; they are sprouting; they ain't fit to eat."

—John is obliged to his father, for if there is any sort of chore more cheerful to a boy than another, on a pleasant day, it is rubbing the sprouts off potatoes in a dark cellar. And the old gentleman mounts his wagon and drives away down the chicken road, with the dog bounding along beside the waggon and refusing to come back at John's call. John half wishes that he were the dog. The dog knows the part of farming that suits him. He likes to run along the road and see all the dogs and other people, and he likes best of all to be on the store steps at the Corners—while his master's horse is dozing at the post and his master is talking politics in the store,—with the other dogs of his acquaintance, snapping at mutually annoying flies and indulging in that delightful dog gossip which is expressed by a wag of the tail and a snuff of the nose. Nobody knows how many dogs' characters are destroyed in this gossip; or how a dog may be able to insinuate suspicion by a wag of the tail, as a man can by a shrug of the shoulders, or sniff, a slander as a man can suggest one by raising his eyebrows.

John looks after the old gentleman driving off in a state, with odorous buffalo-robe and the new whip, and he thinks that, that is the sort of farming he would like to do. And he cries after his departing parent:—

"Say, father, can't I go over to the further pasture and salt the cattle?" John knows that he would spend half a day very pleasantly in going over to that pasture, looking for birds' nests and shying at red squirrels on the way, and who knows but he might "see" a sucker in the meadow brook, and perhaps get a "jab" at him with a sharp stick. He knows a hole where there is a whopper; and one of his plans in life is to go some day and scare him, and bring him home in triumph. It, therefore, is strongly impressed upon his mind that the cattle want salting. But his father, without turning his head replies:

"No, they don't need salting any more'n you do!" and the old equipage goes rattling down the road, and John whistles his disappointment. When I was a boy on a farm and I suppose it is so now, cattle were never salted half enough.

John goes to his chores, and gets through the stable as soon as he can, for that has to be done; but when it comes to the outdoor work, that rather drags. There are so many things to distract the attention, a chipmunk on the fence, a bird on a near tree, and a hen hawk circling high in the air, over the farm yard. John loses a little time in chasing the chipmunk, which rather likes the sport, and watches the bird to find where its nest is; and by convinces himself that he ought to watch the hawk least it pounce upon the chickens, and therefore, with an easy conscience, he spends fifteen minutes in lookoing to that distant bird, and follows it away out of sight over the woods, and then wishes it would come back again. And then a carriage with two horses and a trunk on behind, goes along the road, and there is a girl on the carriage who looks out at John, who momentarily aware that his trowsers are patched on both knee and in two places behind, and the wonders if she is rich, and who she is, and if she is on the track, and how much the carriage cost, and whether that nice-looking man is the girl's father, and if that buggy on the next with the driver is her brother: and if he has to do chores; and so the gay sight appears John fatigued to thinking about the great world beyond the farm of cities and people who are always dressed up, and a great many other things of which he has a very fine notion. And then a boy, whom John knows, rides by in a wagon with his father, and the boy smokes a pipe as John, and John returns the greeting with a twist of his own visage, and some symbolic gesticres. All these things take time. The work of cutting down the big weeds gets on slowly, although it is not very disagreeable, or would not be if it were mere play. John imagines that yonder big thistle is some whiskered villian, of whom he has read in a fairy book and he advances on him with "Die, ruffian!" and slashes off his head with the bill-hook, or he charges upon the rows of mullen stocks as if they were rebels in regimental ranks, and hews them down without mercy. What fun, it might be if there were only another boy there to help! but even war, single-handed, gets to be tiresome. It is dinner time before John finishes his weeds, and it is cow-time before John has made much impression on the garden.

This garden John has no fondness for. He would rather hoe corn all day than work in it. Father seems to think that it is easy work that John can do, because it is near the house. John's continual plan in life is to go fishing. When there comes a rainy day, he attempts to carry it off. But ten chances to one his father has different views. As it rains so that work can not be done out of doors, it is a good time to work in the garden. He can run into the house between the heavy showers. John according detests the garden; and the only time he works briskly in it is when he has a task set, to have so much weeding done before the 4th of July. If he is spry he can make an extra holiday, the Fourth and the day after. Two days of gunpowder and ballplaying! When I was a boy, I supposed there was some connection between such and such an amount of work done on the farm, and our national freedom. I doubted it there could be any Fourth of July if my stent was not done. I, at least, worked for my independence.—C. D. Warner.

A Quaker Printer's Proversbs.

Never send out an article for publication without giving the editor the name, for thy name oftentimes secures publication to worthless articles.

Thou should not rap at the door of a printing office, for he that answereth the rap sneereth in his sleeves and loseth much time.

Neither do thou loaf about, ask questions, or knock down type, or the boys will love thee as they do shade trees—when thou leaveth.

Thou shouldst never read the copy on the printer's case, or the chair and locked container thereof, or he may knock thee down.

Never inquire of the editor for the news, for behold, it is his business at the appointed time, to give it unto thee without asking.

It is not right that thou should ask him who is the author of an article, for his duty requireth him to keep such things to himself.

When thou dost enter into his office, take heed unto thyself that thou dost not look at what may be laying open and concerneth thee not, for that is not meet in the sight of good breeding.

Neither examine thou the proof sheet for it is not ready to meet thine eye, that thou may'st understand.

Peter thine own paper to any other, and subscribe for it immediately.

Pay for it in advance, and it shall be well with thee and thine.—Am. Newspaper Reporter.

"PRINTER WANTED."

This heading meets our eye every few days, in both city and country exchanges. One competent to take charge of an office, is the usual publication in the country newspaper. There are few such printers to be found. They are not 'on the tramp.' They seldom answer such advertisements, because they have no difficulty in finding work where they are know. A 'good printer,' and one that can be depended on, is a rare animal. A boy of fifteen goes into an office, learns the boxes, and is taught the mystery of 'following copy.' He acquires a little speed, gets the big head, sets a match with his employer, quits the office and starts on a 'tramp,' as a full fledged journeyman printer. The country is overrun with such fellows. They meet with rebuffs, become discouraged, reckless and dissipated, and thus being odium to themselves, but the art which they falsely claim to represent, for one of those roaming lushes comes in contact with hundreds of people, while the stay at-home competent workman is known to but few—and the public have made up their verdict that printers, as a class, are a graceless set of scamps. The fault is as much with the employers as the employees. When publishers resolve to employ no time apprentences, boys will not run away after a few months at the case, and none will start on a tramp until they are competent to take charge of an office.'

A BEAUTIFUL AND EFFECTIVE ALLEGORY.—Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky, was at one time defending a man who had been indicted for a capital offence. After an elaborate and powerful defence, he closed his effort with the following striking and beautiful allegory: "When God in his eternal council conceived the thought of man's creation, he called to him the three ministers who constantly wait upon the throne —Justice, Truth, and Mercy—and thus addressed them: 'Shall we make man?' Then said Justice. 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will trample upon the laws.' Truth made answer also, 'Oh, God, make him not, for he will pollute thy sanctuaries.' But mercy, dropping upon her knees, and looking up through her tears, exclaimed, 'Oh, God, make him: I will watch over him with my care through all the dark paths which he may have to tread.' Then God made man, and said to him, 'Oh, man, thou art the child of Mercy; go and deal with thy brother.'" The jury, when he had finished, was drowned in tears, and, against evidence, and what must have been their own convictions, brought in a verdict of not guilty

A Night of Terror.

The following curious adventure happened in Bath, in the year 172—, and the lady who narrated it to the writer was in those days a young girl staying in the house. It was in the palmy days of Bath; when that now fallen city rivalled London in intimacy and dissipation, and when all the rich, the gay and the high born of England congregated there in the season and graced the balls and assemblies.

Mrs. R —, once the belle of the court of George III., but at this period gradually retiring from general society, possessed one of the largest of the old houses, and gave in it entertainments which were the most popular of the day. She was celebrated for three things (once four, but the fourth—her beauty was of the days gone by); these things were her fascination, her benevolence, and a set of the most matchless amethysts.

Her house contained two distinct chambers. The walls of the one in which she slept were hung around with designs from heathen mythology, and the finest piece in the room was that which hung over her dressing table. It represented Phœbus driving the quadriga of the sun. The figures and horses being life size, it filled up the whole space but gave the appearance, and the horses were supposed behind the high, old fashioned Venetian looking glass, while Phœbus himself, as you high, looked down by night and by day upon his mistress at her toilet.

One evening Mrs. R. —had an unusually large party at home. She wore all her amethysts. On retiring to her room, about four o'clock in the morning, she took off all her jewels, laid them on the table and disrobed, her weary maid, intended to put them away herself, but before doing so knelt down, as usual, to say her prayers. While engaged in her devotions it was a habit with her to look upward, and the face of Phœbus was generally her point of sight, as it were, and the object on which her eyes most easily rested. On this particular night, as usual, she raised her eyes to Phœbus. What does she see? Has Pygmalion been here at work? Has he filled those dull silk eyes with vital fire? Or, is she dreaming? No. Possessed naturally of wonderful courage and calmness she continued to move her lips as if in silent prayer, and never once withdrew her gaze, and still the eyes looked down on hers. The light of her candle shone distinctly on liquid, living orbs, and her good keen sight enabled her, after a cleverly managed scrutiny, to see that the tapestry eyes of Phœbus had been cut out, and that with her door locked, and the servants in bed in their distant apartments, and all her jewels spread out before her, she was not alone in her room.

She concluded her prayers with her face hidden in her hands. We can all well imagine were those last prayers must have been! She knew the eyes were some one behind the tapestry; she knew that the bolts and screams were equally useless, and she lay down in her bed as usual, and awaited the issue, her only omission being that she did not put away her jewels. "This may save my life," said she to herself, and she closed her eyes.

The clock struck two before a sound was heard, and then the moment arrived. She heard a rustle, a descent from behind the tapestry, and a man stood at her dressing table. He took off his coat, and one by one he secured the jewels beneath his waistcoat. What would be his next move? Would it be to her bedside, or to the door or window? He turned and approached her bedside; but by that time she had seen enough, and again closing her eyes, resigned herself to the Providence whose protection she had just been craving. The man was her own coachman.

Apparently satisfied by a brief glance under his dark lantern that he had not disturbed her, he quietly unbocked her door and left her. For two hours they must have seemed two days—she allowed the house to remain undisturbed, her only movement having been to unlock the door which her loving Phœbus had left ajar. At seven in the morning she rang her bell, and ordered the carriage round immediately after breakfast. All this was according to her usual habits. On the Editorial Items.

An English journal holds that Canada must be at the expense of changing the guage of the Grand Trunk from broad to narrow.

Some of the Lower Canadian journals endorse the action of the volunteers at Point Levis, in abusing the French Colporteur, Murarre. In doing so the press becomes the slave of public opinion, we fear, when it should be the leader of it.

Three hundred and forty miles of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad were changed from broad to narrow guage in one day. The cost of the change was $1,500,000, and the number of men employed 2,500, seven men to a mile. Ample preparations had been previously made.

In New York during the years 1869 and 1870 the Council paid:

" Plumbing.....	1,231,817

We are requested to say that Mr. Douglass Russell, Evangelist, who will preach next Lord's day in the Baptist Church, of this place, morning and evening, will also hold an Open Air Service on the Court House Square in the afternoon of the same day, at half past 3 o'clock. Messrs. Russell & Carroll have been extensively useful in the western part of this province during the past two years, and Mr. Russell has been very hartily received by American Churches last winter. We hope the services may be largely attended.

THE BRIDGE:—Nothing that we have heard of has been done yet. The Town Council has done nothing to meet the County Council, and by all appearances winter will come before anything definite can be arrived at. A Mr. Kinmount representing a Montreal Bridge building Company was in Town last week, and shewed us some plans of Bridges. He called on some of the Town Council, and also on some of the committee of the County Council, we understand, but nothing definite was done. His estimates for a good bridge were roughly set down at from $9,000 to $12,000, according to the style of Bridge, &c. He also informed us that nothing short of four months would be required from letting the contract to the completion of the work.

We understand that Mr. Croley has also obtained plans of an iron bridge, which he intends to submit to the committee when properly organized. If the matter be allowed to stand over till spring next. The County and Town too, will be in a position not at all desirable, nor advantageous.

For the information of the public on cost of bridges, we clip the following item from a circular of Messrs. Blodget & Curry, of the National Iron Bridge Works, Boston, Mass.

For a span of 30 feet the price is $14.00 per foot and
For " 60 " " $15.00 " "
For " 100 " " $27.00 " "
For " 120 " " $32.00 " "
For " 130 " " $35.00 " "

These spans respectively bear a strain of 22 tons; 30 tons; 75 tons; 90 tons and 97 tons of a distributed load; and would require respectively a distributed load of 90, 120, 300, and 350 tons to break them. The work could be delivered in four to five weeks —and the cost would be therefore—for our bridge about $9,100. The spans, we are told, are exactly 120 feet between mason work; and at the utmost would only be 130 feet each.

'REMEMBER THEM WHO HAVE RULE OVER YOU,' &c.—There can be no better sign of the happy communion of Pastor and people than the kind remembrance in temporal things to those who minister in spiritual things. It is, therefore, with pleasure we insert the following item of presentation to Mrs. Davis; and we would say to all the considerate persons in the different churches—receive the lesson.

PRESENTATION.

Some of the friends of Mrs. (Rev.) G. H. Davis, members of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and others, wishing to show their respect as well as their good wishes towards her, take this method of expressing their sentiments by presenting her with a Lockman Sewing Machine, which they hope she will except from them, as a token of their sentiment. Mrs. R. Parnell kindly lending her services to call on the friends.

REPLY.

Mrs. (Rev.) G. H. Davis begs through the medium of this paper to tend her sincere thanks to her friends for their kind attention, and consideration, in presenting her with so useful an article as a Sewing Machine, and desires to assure them of her full appreciation of this, another expression of their continued regard and affection for herself and family.

Peterboro, August, 1871.

EXAMINATION OF TEACHERS.—The Board of Examiners have just concluded their labors, and issued Certificates to deserving Candidates. After careful and impartial comparison of all the papers, they find themselves able to grant certificates to only 9 out of 25 applicants who were examined. The successful parties are:

Mr. James Campbell, Mr. James Ford, Mr. W. D. Russell.

Miss F. Houlihan, Miss C. Leonard, Miss E. J. Leonard, Miss Kate Murphy, Miss Isabella McNaughton, Miss Amelia Scott.

The values obtained by the other Candidates ranged from 24 to 48 per cent of the whole work.

We advise Teachers to set to work according to the new programme of studies. They have six months to prepare themselves for the next Examination, and two hours daily, well spent, will ensure a marked change in their standing. Regrets are useless. Nothing short of industry, perseverance, and exact information will ensure success. To those Teachers who have Certificates for limited periods, we say, work. Work until you arrive at the summit of your profession, and then you need not fear changes in Law, Examinations or Masters.

Ashburnham.

The Council met on Monday evening; all the members present.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

Communications were read from Thos. Armstrong and others, asking for a reduction of a fine imposed for selling liquors after hours. Received but nothing done.

From W. Bogan asking for a reduction of a fine so as to get Mrs. Johnston out of jail. Merely received.

From the Board of school trustees stating $375 would be required by the board to pay salaries of teachers and incidental expenses of the year; and also asking for $800 to enlarge the school building, as during the past months the old building has been crowded to excess.

Several accounts were ordered to be paid. John Craig, $123; P. & E. Clancey, $5.14, S. S. Kelly, $24; and T. Clement: $100 for drawing maps of the village.

Applications also for charities were received.

A petition from T. Connell and 65 others, praying that the Pound By-law be amended, was laid over to next meeting of the Council.

The Council adjourned for one week.

The Fire Inquest.

By order of the Town Council, Dr. Kincaid held an Inquest last week to investigate the origin of the late fires on Hunter Street. The jury consisted of W. Patterson, foreman, and J. H. Cobb, Q. B. Sproule, W. Doherty, R. Roddy, Hugh Malone, W. White, I. Wilson, W. Leake, Thos. Carr, Louis Meyette and W. Hetherington.

A number of witnesses were sworn, but nothing tending to criminate any one, much less to find out the person or persons who fired the buildings, for it is confidently held by all that the fires were the works of incendiaries.

Mr. C. McGrath, who lived very near the scene of the fire and who lost some property by it, was sworn:—He was at the fire, was not aware in any way of the origin of the fires. The first attempt to fire the shop on the 10th of July he could not account for. The second fire took place in the same shop. Mr. McGrath saw it, was early at it, but knew nothing of its origin.

Mr. Hatton attended the inquest on behalf of some of the Insurance Companies, and examined the witnesses but was able to eficit nothing of importance.

Mr. Mooro, appeared on behalf of other parties.

Mr. O'Shea, who lived in part of the same building with Mr. Galvin, was also sworn, but knew nothing of the origin of the fire. Was in bed asleep when the fire took place, was aroused by his wife and ran out; tried to put the fire out; saw Mr. Galvin at the place; he, (O'Shea), went up on the bellows to where the fire was on the loft of the work-shop, near the partition of the blacksmith shop; saw wood and some sleighs, but could not tell the value of them; a few pails of water would have put it out at first, but he could not say that Galvin could have saved it if he would. Witness believed it was set on fire by some one, but could not tell by whom.

Mrs. O'Shea, wife of the last witness was sworn, but threw no other light on the matter, than general information; was at the fire, saw Galvin break in back door into the shop where the fire was, and saw him with a pail of water but could not tell anything as to the origin of it. Witness had been awakened by Mrs. Galvin, and she aroused Mr. McGrath and family; heard that Mr. Galvin's boy, Hefferman, first gave the alarm of fire; saw some work in the shop but could not say what it was worth.

Josephine Giles gave evidence, but knew nothing of the origin of the fire. Had taken away a cutter for Galvin a day or two before, but nothing else; believed from the position of the fire it must have been set on fire by some one, but knew nothing more about it.

Mr. A. Williams lived in part of the property burned, saw Galvin at the fire, but was most engaged in taking out his own furniture. Witness had helped Mr. Galvin some two months before to take stock; had advised Galvin to do it, and had helped him to do so in April. Witness kept the inventory of stock, but gave Galvin a copy of it. The whole amounted to $1,500, all outside and in to about $1,600. Witness had no knowledge of the origin of the fire, heard Galvin say he was doing well, and that he intended to continue his business. Galvin was well spoken of as an industrious.

P. Hefferman, an apprentice of Mr. Galvin's, and the boy who saw the fire first, was sworn:—He was at the circus at the time of the first fire and knew nothing of it. He first saw the second fire and called Mr. Galvin and wife, then ran out to the shop, broke open the front door of the blacksmith shop and saw where the fire was, and then ran to ring the bell; when he returned the house was all in flames.—This witness described shop and surroundings, and dwelling house, but knew nothing of the origin of the fire whatever, as the crackling of the fire awoke him. He knew that Mr. Galvin was doing well, better than last summer, and heard him say that he was going to release the property, or buy it.

Mr. Galvin was sworn, but the evidence was much to the same effect:—Had left the shop at 4 o'clock on the day before the first fire; was at the circus grounds and walking around; heard the alarm of fire and went to see; heard that it was in Henthorn's Livery Stables, but afterwards found that it was in his own shop. His wife was at the circus at the time, and had gone with Mrs. O'Shea. The remainder of the evidence was similar to previous witnesses—knew nothing of the origin of the fire. He had an insurance of $900 on shop and contents, $400 on dwelling house which belonged to his wife, and $30 on furniture.

Mrs. Galvin, after expressing unwillingness to be sworn, eventually took the oath but her oath was much the same as former witnesses, except as to the manner of Mr. Galvin's leaving the shop in the evening, and the entering in at the time of the fire. But nothing of importance was brought out. She believed it was set on fire, but blamed no one; never blamed any one for doing it; did not know who did it.

There were other witnesses sworn, but as there was nothing throwing light on the origin of the fire elicited, it is useless to give any more evidence.

After several sittings, the Jury brought in the following verdict:

"That the fire was caused by some person or persons that was thoroughly acquainted with the premises, or had access to the building." To which was added:

"And we would recommend the Insurance Companies to be more careful in taking risks on buildings of the kind that have been fired in this case."

The Nissouri Murder.

About two weeks ago a horrible murder was committed in the Township of Nissouri. An innocent inoffensive man, named Campbell, was murdered at night. The assassins using an axe, and the butcher knife in their foul deed. They entered Campbells house, it would appear, while he was asleep, and not suspecting that any such intentions were entertained by any one. It now appears that his wife was a party to the fearful crime; that she left the door open to allow of admission to the scoundrels who were to assist her, and that after doing so she went to bed beyond her unsuspecting victim. Her character was not the best, as her husband had to speak to her father about her conduct, but only received abuse and threats for so doing. Campbell's own hired man, named Koyle, is also committed as one of the murderers, and from the character given of him, he is capable of perpetrating the deed. Some of the wife's relations are also suspected, but the character of the woman, who since her imprisonment has made a confession, forbids receiving her confession with any reasonable degree of confidence.

The jury without a certificate of substantial evidence against the widow before them, but with a suspicion of her guilt which amounted to certainty, hurled a dreadful sentance against herself and alleged paramour Koyle. The widow on Saturday received the news in the jail here with great nerve and coolness, and simply said, "It is untrue." But her guilty conscience received a shock which she has found it impossible to recover from, and the result has been a free confession of guilt. On Saturday night, unable longer to end by the pangs of remorse, or prompted ure fears, as the case may be, she sent for the County Crown Attorney, Mr. Hutchinson, and desired to make a statement. He took it down in writing. The exact terms of the confession have not been made public, and are temporarily withheld to await further developments. She stated in effect, however, that the murder was committed by Thomas Koyle, with her assistance: that the door was purposely left open by her, and Koyle entered steal thily and stunned Campbell, and that they both together completed the butchery. At her urgent request Mr. Hutchinson ddsiatched a telegram to her father, Joseph McWain, senior, telling him to come on to London immediately, up to this moment he has not arrived, although the message was duly delivered into his own hands. He may be expected here at any hour. She declares her intention of telling the whole of the circumstances connected with the case, and a repetition of the horrid matter will no doubt soon be made. Shortly after attesting to Mr. Hutchinson in the form described, Mrs. Campbell desired an interview with Koyle, and was shown to his cell. She was then very quiet and contented in her mind to all appearance, and only desirous of acquainting her conscience of the horrible secret. The following conversation took place:—

Phoebe Campbell—"Well, Tommy, I have confessed it all."

Thomas Koyle—"What have you confessed?"

Campbell—"Why, the murder of George. I said you did it."

Koyle—"You did, did you? And what did you say I did it for?"

Campbell—"You know very well what it was for."

Koyle—"Was it because he choked me in the mow?"

Mrs. Campbell made no answer, but quietly returned to her cell, and Koyle, who said no more, was left to his own reflections.

The strange character of this woman will be somewhat apprehended when it is known that the now contradicts her statement made to the county attorney as to Koyle's guilt. She professes to have been visited in her cell by the spirit of the murdered man, who took her kindly by the hand and called her "his innocent wife." He told her also that "the young man below the stairs" was also innocent and had no hand in the murder—that he says the real murderer is ——, against whom he intends to speak in the presence of her father. They withold his name until the issue is known. Her statements are wild and contradictory, but that she is the guilty one in connection with Koyle no one has any longer a doubt. The man whose name is withheld, and against whom she is about to empty the vial of condemnation, is a distant relation. She says it was he that struck the blow: that he should be lynched by the people: and that when he is lynched vengeance shall have been complete. The revelations of the past thirty hours undoubtedly stamp this woman as one of the most atrocious criminals of this century.

LATER.

On Monday the jail was thronged by people anxious to see the woman. Mr. Jas. Egan took her photograph this afternoon, and she was greatly pleased with the operation.

Last night she had awoke to watch for her husband, who she said had promised to come back to her. About midnight she sprang up in bed and exclaimed

"oh! GEORGE DEAR, IS THAT YOU?"

and seemed to hold a conversation with an invisible spirit. The authorities of the jail say she is of quiet mind, and pronounce her perfectly sane. Her demeanor is calm and unimpassioned. One of the other female prisoners sleeps with her for company. Old McWain has been sent for, but up to this time has not appeared, and it is said he has absconded from Missouri. The constable cannot find him.

The Great Storm in Labrador

The following extracts from a private letter received in New York, fully confirm the special account we published several days ago of a great storm on the coast of Labrador, causing immense destruction of property and life. Further details show that account, so far from having been exaggerated, failed to do justice to horrors which full details pile upon each other.

SAINT JOHN'S, N. F., July 22nd, 1871.—You will probably have learned by this of the terrible storm which occurred recently at Labrador, and brought ruin and desolation to nearly three hundred houses. In this city and Harbor Grace, in fact everywhere throughout the island, on the reception of the calamitous news consternation and excitement prevailed. There being few of us who have not some friend or relative engaged in the Labrador fisheries, either as supplying merchants, traders, or fishermen, a general and painful suspense followed the reception of the first news of the disaster on the 19th inst. This morning, however, on the arrival of the British ship-of-war "Gulnare," which was sent on by the Governor immediately upon his hearing of the disaster, we procured the full details. Besides her crew the "Gulnare" had 322 souls on board, including men, women and children. Their aspect on arriving at the government wharf was calculated to make an indelible impression upon the memory of the most callous.—The terror and famine-stricken looks of the women and children drew from every heart the profoundest sympathy, while men who left here hardly a month ago, stalwart and vigorous, looked emaciated and puny, with long grown beards, haggard looks, and tattered clothing. For those poor fellows there was also much feeling elicited, for not alone had they been many weeks the victims of hunger, cold, and every form of destitution, but they had wholly lost the fruits of their days and nights of toil, and a long, profitless, and inclement winter stared them dismally in its comfortless prospect. The wharf at which the rescued settlers arrived was packed with people of every class, in fact the entire community for far above the wharf, in our principal street, and about the steps, platforms and windows of the custom-house, which is opposite the wharf, anxious crowds gathered and eagerly looked out for the landing of the unfortunates. The commissioner of poor had omnibusses and carriages provided for them, which formed a long line outside the gate of the Queen's wharf. On landing, the sufferers were greeted by a feeble cheer, for nobody could hardly tell whether joy at their safety, or solemn silence in respect for the dead, were more appropriate on the occasion. The rush to meet them from all sides of the crowd was intense and wild. Some had only the living to welcome, and find the relations and friends they had parted with over a month before; but others glanced in vain from one face to another in search of a form laying still below the howling waves and north winds of Labrador. As far as I have learned, twenty-three families who had been accustomed to remove to Labrador on the return of each summer season, have become literally extinct. Not a word has been heard of them since the fatal storm. Their stores, dwelling-houses and flakes were all situated quite near the strand on Indian Sickle. One woman in the prime of life is left alone in the world. Her own father, her father and mother-in-law, her husband, three sons and three daughters were all carried in the schooner "Helen," which was driven from her moorings and never heard of. The woman, who is the only one rescued, was engaged berry picking about half a mile distant when the wind arose suddenly in squalls. Before she reached her husband's craft she was compelled to take shelter in a house which had not been injured, and all of whose inmates were saved. There were as far as the crew of the "Gulnare" could investigate about eighteen persons killed on shore by the falling of trees, flakes or houses.—The rest of the victims of this lamentable catastrophe were remaining on board their crafts when the storm began to rage.—Those of the rescued who arrived here were driven to the spacious halls of the Athenæum, where refreshments and clothing were amply provided for them.

Canadian Nationality.

On the twentieth of last month a new Province was added to the young Dominion, whose limit now extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. But were any one to take the map of North America and draw two lines, one showing the present boundary between the British Provinces and the United States; the other of the Territory ceded by the King of France in 1763 to Great Britain, he would be astounded at the immense extent of country which has been pusillanimously given up to our grasping neighbors. Three disgraceful treaties; one of which the "Alburton," Lord Brougham said, "it was such a treaty as might be exacted at the end of a disastrous war, but was a disgrace to any nation not so absolutely vanquished," have each surrendered tracts of land, some of them more extensive than Great Britain. Had England insisted on maintaining her rights; had she not wilfully allowed her children to be swindled out of their inheritance; had she fostered her North American Colonies as she should have done, they might, ere this, have been sufficiently populous and powerful to hold their own of this continent against all enemies; and have thus been to the Empire a tower of strength, instead of a source of weakness. But, although much that ought to have been ours, is now held by our neighbors, we have still territory large enough and rich enough to maintain a powerful people, and consequently to rouse the jealously of our neighbors, who already look upon us as rivals, and have shown a disposition to throw obstacles in our way. Foremost among the elements of our future greatness stands our Fisheries.

With the enlargement of our boundaries, let us enlarge our modes of thought. Already we almost rank as a nation; but let us ascertain ourselves to take a national view, and to remember that as Canadians what affects any part of the Dominion should interest us just as much as it affected our own particular Province. We must be equally ready to assert the rights of Nova Scotia as those of Quebec.

Some years ago our commercial marine held the fourth rank among the nations of the earth, and with our rapid increase since then, and the concurrent decay of the American shipping, we could not be surprised to hear that we now held the third place; and in a not far distant future hardly any limits can be assigned to the maritime power of the Dominion. Lved by two oceans, and intersected by inland seas and mighty rivers, every thousand mariners already man its ships, and how long the flag of the young Dominion will float in every port of the world. But if we are to realize this brilliant vision we must carefully guard our Fisheries. Valuable as they are in commercial point of view are as an element of natural power of such inestimable importance, that they should not, in our opinion, be surrendered on any consideration.' Yet, strange to say, the treaty of Washington purposes to give them up almost with out consideration for the exemption from duty in American markets, is hardly worth mention ng. It is quite clear, that outside our limits, there is hardly any fish worth catching. The matter then stands thus; we have the fish, the Americans require them; if they put a duty on them, they must pay that duty themselves. Accordingly since the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty the export of fish to American ports has increased and the price has risen.

We can afford to wait as far as fish are concerned, until the Americans adopt not from kindness to us, but from a better knowledge of their own interest a less exclusive system of duties. In the meantime our merchants are finding new markets for our produce. We are fast learning to do our business directly with the consumer, and the Americans have no longer as middlemen the opportunity of abusing as Canucks. As to the ach mission to arbitration of the amount of money in demnity, it is all a farce. Where are we to find an arbitrator on whom we could rely? Europe lies helpless at the feet of the Czar and the Kaiser, and Kaiser and Czar are both too intimate with our American Cousins to be trusted by us, and even a British statesman are inclined to be liberal at our expense. Fortunately the matter is in our own hands. Our right to the inshore fisheries is acknowledged by all parties. They are ours, let us declare once for all, that we will not barter them away.

The pretence that the Fisheries are a source of irritation is a most unparalled absurdity. The irritation is caused by the failure of the American Government to control its own subject; if they will only keep from picking and stealing our fish, we will not require to seize their vessels. As long as they persist in attempting to rob us, they must expect to be irritated.—But if our republican cousins once convinced that we are determined not to be cheated out of our rights, will lay aside their unworthy jealousy, and recognize us as a rival, but not hostile people, will frankly admit our right to shape our own destinies. There is no reason why we should not be on the best of terms.—Aylmer Times.

FELLOWS' HYPOPHOSPHITES.—Mr. Fellows wishes us to state that he has no authorised agent, but that his Hypophosphites may be obtained of all respectable Druggists and Apothecaries at his price.

A Remarkable Event.

From the Delaware (O.) Gazette, July 28.

Knowing that your numerous readers will be anxious to hear something in regard to the wonderful double child's death I send you the following hasty and imperfect statement:

Their death presented a strange appearance and excited the curiosity and pity of all present. They were 9 months and 16 days old, and died at Temple House, No. 6 Bowdoin street, Boston, Mass., July 1st 1871. They had always enjoyed excellent health from their birth until July 4, when on exhibition in Newark, New Jersey, Minnie showed symptoms of illness, and had a severe attack of cholera infantum, and came near death to all appearance, and remained so for about three days, when she commenced recovering very rapidly. This sickness seemed to affect Minnie but very little at the time, but about the 11th inst. Minnie was attacked with continual vomiting, which was very difficult to manage, and this tendency of sickness at the stomach continued more or less until about 8 o'clock in the morning of the 18th, when she had several light convulsions, after which she sank gradually until 4.25 in the evening, when she breathed her last, and the heart belonging to her stopped beating. She was dead to all appearance, without a struggle, and looked as if sleeping pleasantly; in which condition she remained one hour and 45minuter, when she commenced gasping for breath, and artificial means were resorted to to restore respiration. The gasping continued at short intervals until 7.15, when she gave the last gasp. After this Mina, who had been perfectly well to all appearances until Minnie stopped breathing showed signs of uneasiness and continued sinking very rapidly, and died at 8.15, just one hour from the time that Minnie gave the last gasp for breath. They both died very easy, and looked as if going into a pleasant sleep, and never gave a struggle, and now they are quite and lovely to look upon in death, as they always were in life. The two souls have passed from the one body to the God that gave them this truly wonderful and curious body.

They apparently escaped the ordinary suffering incident to death, for the countenances had the expression of sweet repose. Through the influence of myself and several of the leading physicians of Boston we had a fine plaster cast taken of the child, which I can have duplicated at any time for the benefit of science. After this we had a post-mortem examination, which revealed many wonderful curiosities both in anatomy and physiology.

The exciting cause of their death was a cystic abdominal tumor, weighing three pounds and six ounces. I may at some future time give you a more detailed account of this wonderful beings life as well as its death. Yours very respectfully,

H. BESSE, M. D.

The Delaware Gazette says editorially:

Dr. Besse reached his home in this place on Saturday evening last. The post-mortem examination, at which he assisted, developed the fact that the connection of the viscera in the two bodies—if we may so speak of the two opposite sections or ends of the child—took place by interjunction of the intestines just above the colon, which organ is not duplicated, but is common for both infants. There was also but one womb one bladder, the latter being the receptacle of two different ureters. Above the colon all the organs were duplicated and perfect as in any well-developed human being.

The body of the child, or children, was carefully embalmed and put into a casket containing alchol and having glass facings, which afford a good view of the body, which is well preserved. In the casket the child looks natural and appears as if in repose. It has been brought by the parents to their home, near Ashley, where it yet remains. The Boston Medical Society offered $6,000 for it, but the offer has been declined. Probably not less than $10,000 would induce the parents to part with the treasure.

Riots in Dublin.

On Sunday morning in spite of the prohibition of the authorities, the friends of amnesty attempted to hold a meeting this afternoon in Phœnix Park. Mr. Smyth, M. P., Mr Sullivan, editor of the Nation, and Mr. John S. Byrne, of the Irishman, entered the Park with a large crowd. Police Superintendent Haw, standing on the Wellington monument, ordered Smyth and his followers to desist, when he was hurled to the bottom of the monument and barbarously maltreated. A fearful riot ensued. The police charged many and beat and kicked men, women and children in theriminately. The fight lasted half an hour, when the police, having been reinforced, succeeded in dispersing the rioters.

Smyth, Sullivan, and a man named Noe were badly wounded. Over one hundred injured have been taken to the hospitals. The authorities are firm in their determination to prevent any meeting, and the leaders of the attempt to-day will be prosecuted.

The Railroad Gazette says: Some persons erroneously suppose that the more iron there is in a bridge the stronger it will be. But a little reflection will show that is only the iron that is working, or in other words, that is actually strained by the load, that contributes to the strength of the structure. All the rest is dead weight, and merely weighs down the bridge in very short spans, this is not disadvantageous, as it tends to diminish vibration; but in long spans, where the weight of the bridge much exceeds that of the load crossing over it, every pound of iron that does not contribute to the strength of the bridge is a positive injury. To illustrate this more clearly if our bridge weighs 125 tons and another 250, and both are strained by the rolling load 10,000 lbs. per square inch, the lightest is the strongest of the two. But if the 125 ton bridge be strained 10,000 lbs. per square inch, while the 250 ton bridge is strained only 5,000 lbs. per square inch, then the latter has really double the strength and double the iron of the former; for half the iron materials away, and then the working area of the bar will be equal. It is not clearly perceiving this fact—that the strength of the bridge depends upon the working area of its parts—that has lead our English friends to make such heavy bridges.

"In several plates, if the strain per square inch is alike for similar bars, they must all be of the strength providing the connections are equally perfect. Some take more than others to effect the result; but the result is the same.

"The lightness of American bridges is due first, to the concentration of material along the lines of strain, which enables a lighter web system to be used, and hence a higher truss: 2nd, to this great height of truss, which throws less leverage on the upper and lower chord system, and hence requires less iron in their members; 3rd, to the use of eye and pin connections, instead of rivets, by which there is no waste of metal to compensation for the deduction of rivet-holes.

"American bridges are stiffer vertically and better braced laterally, than English bridges, their greater hight giving less deflection under a load, and allowing of overhead bracing, as well as that below the track.

"But the less quantity of iron required to do the work is not the whole explanation of the less cost of American as compared with English bridges. A second and equally important reason is the less amount of manual labor required to construct and erect them—owing to the general use of machinery in forming all the parts. English bridges are made of low priced iron, and require a great deal of it, and a great deal of hand labor in constructing and erecting.

"American bridges have all their principal parts formed by machinery. They are of exact uniform dimensions, in similar spans, and hence perfectly interchangeable, like the parts of the locks of the American rifle, or of sewing machines. Hence, machine-labor can be applied to their manufacture, and the cost of the works reduced to a minimum.

"But American bridges have still another advantage. They are so made that nearly all the work is done at the shops, and they can be erected with the least possible amount of labor, and that unskilled. In fact, the cost of erecting the staging is the principal expense; after that, a 200 feet span can be erected and made self-sustaining in the space of two days, if necessary.

"But the English bridge is only about half done when the scaffolding is built and the iron placed upon it. It has then to be riveted together, which is expensive as the conveniences for such a work at the site of a bridge are not often great. It is slow and tedious, requiring from two to three weeks to put together a 200-feet span.

"Taking all these things into account, it will be seen how American bridge-builders have been able to compete with English firms on the large bridges at Buffalo, and in the recent case of the long span bridges of the Intercolonial Railroad of Canada."

We ask attention to these facts, because they refute the constant assumption of Free Traders, that if an article pays a high duty here, it is inevitable that it should cost more than under a low duty. Canada has Free Trade; but there was no Canadian bid for these Canadian bridges. Of course, they cost more when erected than similar bridges put up in this country. Shall this truth be heeded?

My Fidgety Wife.

It is just as you say, neighbor Green,
A treasure indeed is my wife;
Such another for busy work
I have never found in my life,
But then she keeps every one else
As busy as birds on the wing;
There is never a moment to rest,
She is such a fidgety thing!

She makes the best custards in town,
Her pies are a perfect delight;
Her coffee a rich golden brown;
Her tarts and her puddings just right
But then, while I eat them, she tells
Of the care and worry they bring;
Of the martyrdom toil she endures;
Oh, she is such a fidgety thing!

My house is as neat as a pin;
You shou'd see how the door-handles shine;
And all of the soft cushioned chairs
And nicely swept carpets are mine.
And then she so frets at the dust,
At a fly, at a straw, or a string,
That I stay out of doors all I can;
She is such a fidgety thing!

It's just as you say neighbour Green,
A treasure to me has been given;
And sorry indeed I should be
If my treasure were called up to heaven,
But then every life has its cross,
Most pleasures on earth have a sting,
She's a treasure I know, neighbor Green,
But she is such a fidgety thing.

An old lady on a steam boat observed two men pumping up water to wash the deck, and the captain being near, she accosted him as follow's.—Well, captain got a well aboard eh?—'Yes, ma'am,' 'That's clever. I always dislike this nasty river water, especially in dog days.

The Editor.—A schoolboy's composition, "The Editor," ran as follows in a school not far from Cincinnati:—

The Editor is one of the happiest animals in the known world. He can go to the circus afternoons and evenings, without paying a cent; also to inquests and laughings. He has a free ticket to pic-nics and strawberry festivals, gets a licking, but not often, for he can take things back the next issue, which he generally does. I never knew but one to get kikt. His paper busted that day, and couldn't take nothing back.

While other folks have to go to bed early, the editor can be up late every night and see all that is going on. The boys think that it is a big thing to hang out till one o'clock.

When I am a man I mean to be an editor, so I can stay out nights. Then that will be bully. The editor don't have to saw wood or do any chaping except with cisor: Railroads get excursions for him knowing that if they didn't he'd make them get up and git. In politics he don't care much who he goes for if they are on his side. If they ain't he goes for 'em any way so it succeeds to nearly the same thing. There are a great many people trying to be editors and can't, and some of them have been in the profession years. They can't see it though.—If I was asked if I would rather have an education or be a circus rider I would say let me go and be an editor.

—A deadly of twenty six having been termed an 'old bachelor,' appealed to an elderly gentleman to decide whether he should be called old or not, giving his age 'Twenty-six,' said the elderly gentleman. It is owing to how you take it. Now for a man it is young enough; for a goose it is rather old.'

A story is told of a father in a church who, when the marriage service came to the point where the clergyman asks, Who gave this woman to be married to the man? replied: Well, sir, I am called to do it.—although it do go ugin the grain. I wanted her to marry Bill Plowser, who is worth twice the money o'that one man.'

Boiling potatoes is apparently one of the most simple operations of the elementary cookery. Yet at a recent meeting in London, a gentleman had the courage to say that not one girl in seventeen, of a certain parish he knew could boil a potatoe. Others state that so great is the disregard of English house wives just now for all household matters that this indifference is one of the most outward and visible signs of the deterioration of the English nation.

A Philadelphia young lady appeared at the naval ball, Cape May, on the Fourth of July, in a dress made entirely of white lace, which was purchased in Brussells at a cost of about seven thousand dollars. It is kept in an air-tight case and the sun-light is never allowed to fall upon it.

For the Teeth.—At the American Dental Association some time ago the Committee on Dentifrices and Washes recommended the following receipt for a tooth powder: prepared chalk, three pounds; pulverized Peruvian bark two pounds; Orris root one pound; white sugar, one and one half pounds; Castile soap, one ounce; carbonate of soda, one ounce; oil of sassafras, eight drops. To make a tooth paste add to the foregoing three ounces of glycerine and a sufficient quantity of honey to make the preparation of the proper consistency.

Meals and Health.—Take them at regular hours; breakfast should be enjoyed soon after rising, and before any laborious exercise. Eat to late supper. Severe physical or mental labor during the last hour eaten before or after meals should be avoided when possible.

A Wise Excuse.—On one occasion at a dinner at the Bishop of Chester's Hannah More urged Dr. Johnston to take a little wine. He replied, 'I can't drink a little, child, and therefore I never touch it.—Abstinence is so easy to me as temperance would be difficult.' Many have the same infirmity, but are destitute of the same courage, and therefore are timid.

Definition on Antidote for Opium.—A correspondent, a professional physician in a letter to the "Medical and Surgical Reporter," details the circumstances of a case where the patient had taken three ounces of opium tincture or laudanum, which had exerted its effects three and a half hours. Third extract of bel adonna was then administered in doses of twenty drops every ten minutes, which in twenty minutes arrested the progress of the opiate and in about eight hours the patient was so far recovered as to sit up and converse.

Onions Exceedingly Dangerous.—An anonymous writer says:—We are very often troubled with severe coughs, the result of colds of long standing, which may turn to consumption or pneumonia with fatal results. Hoarseness causes sleepless nights by constant irritation in the throat, and a strong effort to throw off offensive matter from the lungs. The remedy I propose has often been tried by me, with good results, which is simply to take into the stomach before retiring for the night a piece of raw onion, after chewing. This onion in an unboiled state is very heating, and tends to collect the waters from the lungs and throat, causing immediate relief to the patient.

A Traveller's Experiences at Niagara

"A correspondent of a New York paper thus recites his experiences of a visit to Niagara.

"When I first got to Niagara the hack-drivers took a fancy to me. They chased me up so that at one time there were at least twenty of them in a line anxious to do me a favour. It was a queer-looking sight. If I didn't know I was alive, I would have thought I was a corpse at the head of a funeral procession. Niagara is a nice place to get rid of money. It is full of feather fans with stuffed birds in the middle of them, alabaster whistles, squaws, bead moccasins, canes cut out of the falls, eagles stuffed with straw, owls chuck full of hay, little birds that wish they were alive, two cents' worth of ice cream for a quarter of a dollar, and such like. You can buy ten cent worth of anything at Niagara by just paying one dollar for it. This is the greatest place in the world for bridal couples; they are always here, with orange blossoms growing out of the woman's heads, and the men done up in black broadcloth, all very susceptible, and all green—very green. I'll tell you something about a bridle couple, not a bridal couple. A pair of hack horses are a bridle couple, and its about a pair of hack horses I have to write. A fellow who had one of these teams started a conversation with me, and we conversed together thusly:—'Take a ride?' 'No.' 'To Goat Island?' 'No.' 'Lunar Island?' 'No.' 'Suspension Bridge?' 'No.' 'Rapids?' 'No.' 'Whirlpool?' No.' 'Devil's Hole?' 'No.' 'Horse-shoe Falls?' 'No.' 'Clifton House?' 'No.' You see, I'd been to all those places, and didn't scour much to go to them some more. I hadn't been to Lunday's Lane, and when he said 'Lundy's Lane?' says I, 'Who is Lundy?' 'Why,' says he, 'there is where the American eagle soard alof, and, with one fell swoop, blucked a turf from the mane of the British lion.' 'No!' said I. 'Yes,' said he. 'Have they preserved the tuft?' I asked. He said they had. Says I, 'How much to do Lundy?' 'Well,' says he, 'seeing it's you, I'll take you there for a dollar, and you couldn't go for less than that in a wheelbarrow.' I got into his vehicle, and going out everything was all hunky. By and by he came to what he called Lundy's Lane. It was two or three patches of grass with rail fences around them, one brindle cow with a fence around her, and a country road. The driver said he guessed I had better pay. So I gave him a dollar bill, painted green on the back. 'Why,' said he, 'we are in Canada, and I want gold.' Says I, 'I hain't got no gold.' He said I was a sickly looking cuss what had to come to the Falls for my health. So he squared himself, and doubled up two fists that looked like lager beer kegs, and said, 'You little withered cuss, you, if you don't come down, with a quarter, I'll punch your snoot.' My snoot feels better when it ain't punched, so I came down with a quarter. Then I said, 'I guess I've got enough of Lundy,' and went to get into his waggon, when he yelled out, 'What in thunder are you doing?' I said, 'Getting in.' 'Well,' said he, 'that is cool. You had better get out again, dard'd quick.' Then he broke the news very gently that he had agreed to bring me out for a dollar, and the price for going back would be five dollars. 'No!' said I. 'Yes!' said he. 'Then I'll walk,' said I. 'Walk and be darn'd,' said he. He got on his old rattle box and commenced to move. I looked like one-twelfth dozen mourners at a one hack funeral. He talked to me thusly:—'Hot, ain't it? shower soon.' Up came the clouds, and down came the rain. I had walked a mile, and I said, 'I guess I'll get in.' I gave him $5. He said, 'Give me another dollar.' I told him he agreed to take me for $5. 'Oh,' said he, 'It was pleasant then, but you see it is raining now.' I gave him the money, and finally reached the hotel, and don't take hacks no more.

A Funeral instead of a Marriage.

The young man Charles H Pettit, aged 22, who was shot and instantly killed in the riot, was engaged to be married in a few weeks to an estimable young woman named Ida R Johnson and it was while returning from her house, after extending an invitation to go to Brooklyn, that he met his untimely end After leaving her residence he walked to Eighth avenue, having some business to attend to, promising to return in short time. Miss Johnson seems to have had a presentiment of danger, and earnestly entreated Pettit to remain at her house during the evening, but his persistent argument of urgent business caused her to give way. Twenty minutes had scarcely elapsed when a message ran to her house with the sad news that young Pettit had been shot through the heart, and was lying dead on the avenue. The fatal news was so sudden that she sank insensible, and is covered only to be a raving maniac. Yesterday morning she had partially recovered, but at short intervals cries pitying and frantic manner for him who is deaf to all earthly sounds. A few days ago the young man received a letter from his mother signifying her intention to visit New York to witness his marriage. On Wednesday night the sad intelligence was telegraphed to her, and she expected to arrive in the city today.—N. Y. World, 14th.

A Successful Fire Insurance Company

THE MARKET VALUE OF THE STOCK IS NOW 350 PER CENT.

The following is an extract from the annual report of the Agricultural Insurance Company, of Watertown, N.Y., as presented by the Secretary, January 11, 1871:—

Gentlemen—The year just closed has been a disasterous one for Fire Insurance Companies generally throughout the country. The receipts of very many have not been more than sufficient to meet their losses and expenses, while others have lost largely beyond their receipts. The extreme hot weather of the past summer, continuing for months, many localities suffering severely from drouth, was a prolific source of fires. The business of our Company being confined to farm property and detached residences, our losses by lightening were very large—double those of any former year. We paid during the year 145 losses by lightening alone. Our entire losses for the year were $163 250 61, an increase of about $65,000 over any previous year. But notwithstanding the large increase in our losses, the increase in our business has enabled us to add about the usual average amount to our surplus. It may not be out of place here to take a retrospect of our business for the last eight years:—

Jan. 1st, 1863, the amount of our surplus above capital stock was	$ 45,572 79
1864, it was increased to the sum of	67,807 63
1865	103,077 17
1866	150,221 29
1867	202,038 94
1868	255,136 24
1869	300,006 59
1870	367,714 78
1871	441,358 57

This last amount, $441,358 57, with our capital of $109,000.00, make our assets at this date 541,358.57. It has been our rule in the past to make a dividend to our Stockholders to the amount only of our interests and rents. I think this policy wise, and should be adhered to in the future. The interest and rents of the Company for the past year amount to the sum of $29,927.20. I would recommend that a dividend of 30 per cent upon the capital stock of the company be declared, which will only exceed the amount received for interests and rents the sum of $72 70.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The above most favorable report must satisfy the most incredulous that the Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N.Y., is the strongest and most reliable Company doing business in Canada. It has deposited with the Receiver General of Canada $100,000.00. It will accept only non-hazardous risks. It will only insure detached residences in towns and vicinity, and farming property It never can loose to exceed $5,000 in one fire, as in taking larger risks they immediately reinsure the difference in some other good Company. Its rates are the lowest of any Company in the Dominion. It is a purely Purely stock Company, and every $100 of its stock is worth $350, being over twice as much as that of any other Fire Insurance Company doing business in Canada.

Mr. W. A. King is agent for this Company at Peterborough.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or use.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, internal may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworms, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Pain, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion, Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from bile rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR

CONSUMPTION

and acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most Reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF and CURE of all

LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season, seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Pains or Soreness in the Chest and Side, Bleeding at the Lungs, Liver Complaint, &c.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED

by a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors,

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

does not dry up a Cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs, and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

and all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

Beware of Counterfeits.

Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

One Dollar a Bottle. Six Bottles for Five Dollars.

Perfected Spectacles

AND EYE GLASSES.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing Spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

The Bashful Lover.

Ah, well! John came to-night and stood
For full half hour beside the bars;
And we two watched, between the trees,
The glimmer of the moon and stars.

John acted very strange, I think,
I wish I knew the reason why;
I really thought he meant to say
Something to-night besides good-bye.

John's coming here quite often now;
I'm sure I don't know why he should.
Although my sister Jenny says
It's talked about the neighborhood

That he is making love to me,
The strangest thing I ever heard;
For if it's true, how queer it is
That John has never said a word.

Ah, well! I shouldn't care so much
If John himself had told me so;
For then he might have said it all,
Upon his own account, you know.

But he's so bashful, I believe
He'd never dare to speak out plain;
I hope he'll master courage up,
And try it, when he comes again.

It cannot be that I'm to blame—
I'm sure I've helped him all I could;
I've always met him at the bars,
And talked as any woman would

That had a lover whom she liked,
And waited, with her heart aglow,
For him to break the subject first.
And then how quick she'd let him know.

But John, he keeps a-coming still,
Just as he has for twelve months past
I've thought sometimes it looked as though
I'd have to speak myself at last,

I'm bound that he shall know the truth
And now resolved, I cannot wait
For him to find it out himself;
And so, next time, I'll try my fate

Re-United at Last.

"Now, good-bye, mamma dear; don't cry. As soon as I sell these papers I will come back."

And the handsome, manly little fellow of ten kissed his mother's pale lips, and hurried into the street.

Five years before, Annie Weldon had occupied a comfortable house at the West End, and in the companionship of her loving husband and bright little Willie, she was happy and contented; and now she was the occupant of a miserable garret, and tasting the bitter cup of extreme poverty.

Her first sorrow came when George Weldon told her that business called him for a few months to the West Indies; the second and cruelest when it was announced that the vessel on which he had embarked had sunk, with all on board.

When Annie had recovered from the effects of the prostration into which the announcement of her husband's death had thrown her, she found that a base friend had robbed them of all their property; and deserted by all her friends and relations, and not knowing what to do, she was thrown upon the cold charities of the world. Resuming her maiden name, Annie Lee, that none of her once fashionable friends could trace her humble career, she commenced her struggle with poverty and bitter cruel fate.

By her needle, and the sale of newspapers on the streets by Willie, she managed barely to keep body and soul together; but their united earnings were scanty and precarious, affording but few necessities.

Willie hurried along the streets soliciting the purchase of his papers by the passers-by and when he had disposed of all his stock except two or three, he noticed a gentleman beckoning him from the opposite side of the street, and he started off towards him.

The gentleman had the appearance of a traveller, as his bronzed features indicated. He had been regarding Willie for some moments with a peculiar light in his eye, before he beckoned to him.

While running towards the stranger, with a paper extended in his hand, Willie stumbled, and fell beneath the feet of the omnibus horses.

The usual commotion on such occasions followed, the driver of the omnibus, not seeming, however, much concerned, as he muttered something about its being only a newsboy.

But the strange gentleman seemed to regard him as something more than that to him; for he gazed into his pale, unconscious face with the deepest pain and anxiety, as he dragged him from beneath the horses' feet and hurried with him to the nearest druggist's establishment.

Happily, Willie had suffered no serious injuries, and he was soon restored to consciousness. He thanked the gentleman for his kindness, and said that his mamma would thank him, too, if she had the opportunity.

"Who is your mamma?" enquired the stranger.

"My mamma's name is Annie Lee, and mine is Willie," answered the little boy.—"But, sir, are you ill? How very pale you look!"

At the name of Annie Lee the stranger started, and leaning eagerly forward, as if to lose no syllable of the answer, he asked, in trembling tones, "And is your father living?"

"No, sir; he was drowned on his way to the West Indies. If he were living mamma would not be so badly off, or weep so much as she does.

"At last—at last!" the stranger cried, and folded the boy in his arms, saying!—"My poor boy! and my poor Annie! how you must have suffered! Look up, Willie, and see your father. He was not drowned, but cast away on a desolate island. But at last he has found you, and will never leave you again.

But among the crowd who had gathered during the enacting of this strange scene was the only brother of George Weldon, a cruel and dissipated man.

Henry Weldon had plunged into all the vices of the metropolis, and cared nothing for his brother save that he might inherit his wealth; for he was the only heir if the mother and child were not forthcoming, as he had hoped they would not, his brother's search for them, from the time of his return to that moment having proved unavailing. So when he witnessed the touching scene of the meeting between parent and child, instead of rejoicing, he looked upon the innocent child with the deepest, blackest hatred.

It took no great time for him to form his plans; and when his brother turned aside to speak to the druggist, Henry Weldon stepped unobserved to the side of the child, and, bending low down, whispered in the boy's ear, "That's a madman! Run for your life! He has just got away from me, and will kill you pexxt," and pushing him out on the pavement, "just repeat the injunction, 'Mad as a March hare,' and don't let him see you again, either, or he'll kill you!"

And Willie, startled and astonished and terrified, ran undecided a few steps, and in a moment was lost to view.

Then slipping a coin into the hands of a ragged boy standing near, he said, "Find out Beaumont Allen's mansion, and tell me to-night, at the Bazoo," and turning back into the store, was discovered by his brother [illegible] had finished his business [illegible] March has been successful. See you, long lost boy! and the happy father hurried to where he had left Willie.

But no Willie was there. George Weldon stood for a moment perplexed, and then turning down into the vacant chair beside him, he covered his face with his hands, and rocked back and forth, groaning in agony.

"Gone, gone, gone! My God! Why am I thus punished? Oh, Annie! Willie! When I thought I had found you at last to be cruelly disappointed!"

Henry inquired the cause of his brother's agony with apparent ignorance of the facts. The unhappy father detailed the incidents just related, little suspecting that his brother had thus cruelly deprived him of his child. And now he recalled the fact that he neglected to ask Willie the abode of himself and mother; so there he stood, just where he had before the meeting with Willie, except that he now knew to a certainty that his darling wife and child yet lives, and were suffering daily the pangs of poverty.

With haggard face and anxiously step, the broken hearted man accepted his brother's arm, and made his way back to his hotel; and not until late, that evening did he recover from the stupor of despair into which his had sunk. Then sending for the district superintendent of police, he laid before him the history of his troubles and brought his aid.

"Humph!" said that worthy, after listening to a recital of the incidents of the day. "Why did the youngster run away, do you suppose, after discovering you to be his father?"

"I can't imagine. He seemed so good and gentle, and placed such apparent confidence in what I said," answered Mr. Weldon.

"Have you any other relatives?" asked the officer.

"Only one—my brother, Henry Weldon, who came into the druggist's after my son disappeared.'

"Is this his portrait?" said the superintendent, picking up a photograph lying on the table before him.

"Yes.'

"Humph! I think I have seen him a few times,' was the laconic reply of the officer.

And then he relapsed into a brown study of some minutes' duration; when he suddenly asked, "Have you much property, Mr. Weldon'

"Yes, a considerable fortune,' answered Weldon, somewhat astonished at the question.

"And if you never find your wife or child, your brother will inherit it—will he not?'

"Yes; for though my brother is wild and dissipated, I love him; and I trust I may be able to reform his habits. But I must find my loved ones; I must, I must!' he added, excitedly.

"Well, sir,' replied the superintendent, "I will do what I can to find out their whereabouts, and will return here to-morrow night; but do not build your hopes too high; for there are many more lost than found in this great city,' and he bowed himself out.

In one of the worst quarters of the city, where crime and debauchery vie with reeking filth, in gaining the mastery of the people, was the rat-pit of Kit Burns. Here the lowest wretches of the metropolis congregated to witness the prowess of scarcely more brutal dogs in rat-killing, or in teasing or mangling each other; and here blasphemy, crime and squalid misery held carnival. Desperate roughs, garroters, pugilists, burglars and thieves there found society; and over their foul pipes and poisonous liquor discussed the merits of the respective dogs within the pit, or planned new jobs for themselves. And here it was that Henry Weldon had planned to meet the street Arab on the night of the occurence previously related, and learn from him the whereabouts of his brother's wife and child—for no good purpose, it may by divined.

It was not a gala night in this model house of amusement, and the rat-pit was but dimly lighted, while but a few persons leaned over the railing which surrounded the pit, and these were only discussing the events of other occasions. In one corner alone, and in the deeper gloom of the half-lighted room, sat Henry Weldon, awaiting the arrival of his spy. His face had lost none of its malignant expression; but rather an increased determination and ferocity marked its features. He was ill at ease, and ever and anon muttered expressions of impatience at the delay of the person for whom he waited. As often as the door opened he started up, and then not seeing the one he expected, fell back in his seat muttering. 'If Sly Bill fails me to-night, he shall never undertake another job for his pals.'

And a fearful oath seemed to add imaginary strength to the threat.

Presently the door opened, and a person entered who evidently was unwelcome to the company. The men stared at him as he appeared and then slunk away from his cool, searching, gaze like whipped hounds.

He was evidently looking for some one; but, as he swept the apartment with his piercing eye, none of its inmates could tell whether he saw the object of his search or not. Had they heard him mutter, however, as he brushed past a muffled figure in a doorway a few feet off, after he left the ratden, 'He's there, Bill; now look out for him,' more than one desperate villain would have quailed.

The stranger was the superintendent of police.

In the den of Kit Burns, Weldon still watched for the street Arab, and in a short time longer he had the satisfaction of seeing the fellow enter. He was soon made acquainted with the coveted facts; and drawing his cloak well around him, he sallied forth into the street.

Not so well disguised was he, however, but that the muffled figure in the adjacent doorway knew him, and falling into the rear, followed him at a safe distance through the almost deserted streets. Down one street and up another, across here, and back again there, Henry wended his way; and behind went, down and up, and across and back, the faithful detective, whom the superintendent had put upon his track.

At last he arrived before a squalid, rickety, low lodging-house, before which he stopped; and after carefully examining it, he sought the door, and pushed in with noiseless steps. Ascending the shaking stairs, pair after pair, he came at last to the fourth story, and paused before a door, more decayed and broken than the others, and without fastenings of any description. In the room to which this door stood a places, and the doctor's invitation to ride found her sufficiently disenthralled to see in it a pleasing novelty.

'I've half a mind to go,' she said, smiling. She had not smiled before since the doctor came in.

'I'll ring for your maid,' and Doctor Farleigh's hand was on the bell-rope before Mrs. Carleton had space to think twice, and endeavor a change of thought.

'I'm not sure that I am strong enough yet,' said Mrs. Carleton, and she laid her head back upon the cushions in a feeble way.

'Tut, tut—of that,' replied the doctor.

'Bring me a shawl and bonnet, Alice! I am going to ride out with the doctor.'

The sentence spoken. [illegible] will be too much [illegible] weak I am. The very thought of such an effort exhausts me.'

'Not a thought of the effort,' replied the doctor. 'It isn't that.'

'What is it?'

'[illegible] of appearance—of what people [illegible] don't think me so [illegible] the free spoken [illegible] people are all [illegible] haven't a spark [illegible] dependence. No, [illegible] strong enough [illegible] elegant carriage—[illegible] the doctor? O dear, no! If you [illegible] of not meeting Mrs. McFlimsey's carriage, the experiment might be advantageous [illegible] is always out on fine [illegible]

'Oh! How can you say [illegible] color crept into the face of Mrs. Carleton, while her eyes grew brighter—almost flashed.

The maid came in with a shawl and bonnet. Dr. Farleigh had given intimated understood his patient, and said just two or three words aloud in a tone half contemptuous.

'Afraid of Mrs. McFlimsey? Not I; nor of Lady Mrs. McFlimsey?'

It was not the ghost of color that warmed Mrs. Carleton's face now, but the crimson of quicker heart beats. She actually arose from the chair without reaching for her hand's handkerchief, and allowed her shawl was adjusted and the bonnet strings tied.

'We shall have a charming ride,' said the doctor, as he crowded in beside his fashionable lady companion and took the loose reins. He noticed that he sat up [illegible] and with scarcely a sign of the langor that but a few minutes ago had so oppressed her.

'Lean back when you see Mrs. McFlimsey's carriage, and draw your veil closely. She will never dream that it is you.'

'Be not angry if you play on that string much longer,' exclaimed Mrs. Carleton, what do I care for Mrs. McFlimsey?'

How charming the hints flushed her sweet eyes, that where leaden a little before.

Away from the noisy streets, out upon the smoothly beaten road, and amid green fields and woodlands, gardens, and flower orchards, the doctor bore his patient, holding her all the while in pleasant talk.

How different this from the listless, companionless drives taken by the lady in her own carriage—a kind of easy vibrating machine, that quickened the sluggish blood no more than a cushioned rocking-chair.

Closely the doctor observed his patient. He saw how erectly she continued to sit, how the color deepened in her face, which [illegible] and fuller; how the [illegible] of enjoyment fairly danced in her eyes.

Returning to the city by a different road, the doctor, after driving through streets entirely unfamiliar to his companion, drew up before a row of mean looking dwellings, and dropping the reins, stepped upon the pavement, at the same time reaching out his hand to Mrs Carleton.—But she drew back, saying,

'What is the meaning of this, doctor?'

'I have a patient here, and I want you to see her.'

'O no; excuse me, doctor, I've no taste for such things,' answered she lady.

'Come—I can't leave you alone in the carriage. Ned might take a fancy to walk off with you.'

Mrs. Carleton glanced at the patient old horse, whom the doctor was attempting, with a slightly alarmed manner.

'Don't you think he will stand, doctor?' she asked uneasily.

'He likes to go home, like others of his tribe. Come;' and the doctor held out his hand in a persistent way.

Mrs. Carleton looked at the poor tenements before which the doctor's carriage had stopped with something of disgust and something of apprehension.

'I can never go in there doctor.'

'Why not?'

'I might take some disease.'

'Never fear. More likely to find a panacea there.'

The last sentence was in an undertone.

Mrs. Carleton left the carriage, and crossing the pavement, entered one of the houses, and passed up with the doctor to the second story. To his light tap at a chamber door, a woman's voice said,

'Come in.'

The door was pushed open, and the doctor and Mrs. Carleton went in. The room was small, and furnished with the humblest manner, but the air was pure, and everything looked [illegible] In the pale bent [illegible] chair, with a pillow pressed back for a support, sat a pale emaciated woman, whose large, bright eyes looked up eagerly at so unexpected a visitor as the lady who came in with the doctor. On her lap a baby was sleeping, as sweet and fair and beautiful a baby as ever Mrs. Carleton had looked upon

FREE LECTURE:—The Rev. Mr. Fletcher will lecture this evening in the First Presbyterian Church, on Manitoba. The lecture will be free.

A boy about four years old belonging to Mr. Northey, of Selwyn, last week was so severely burned by falling into a tub of hot water, that he died in a few hours.

THE BIBLE CHRISTIAN CHURCH:—The Rev'd. John Sanderson, Wesleyan Minister, will preach (D. V.) in the B. C. Church, on Sabbath next, in the morning at 10:30. And the Rev. R. Allen, of Perrytown, in the evening, at 6:30 p. m.

TEMPERANCE LECTURE:—Thos. Flynn, Esq., of Napanee, a first class Temperance Lecturer, will lecture here on Saturday, 19th inst., in the Temperance Hall, at 8 p. m. We trust he will have a full house. Temperance requires to be made popular here yet.

In Michigan, under the amended liquor law now in force, any person who is found drunk in any saloon, tavern, or public place, or in the street, is liable to a fine of $5 and costs, or imprisonment for not more than twenty days. This is the way to make revenue.

The Hastings Chronicle complains that the Grand Junction, bubble shall we call it, was nothing more or less than a Tory movement to get Mr. Graham elected—the whole thing, electioneering clap-trap. Perhaps the Belleville people may awake yet and do something outside of political scheming to suit John Sandfield.

LIFE IN CALIFORNIA:—A man named "Portuguese Joe," lately seized a young lady who refused to marry him, while she was walking with a friend, bent her back and plunged a knife into her neck, cut her breast open, and also pierced her heart. She died instantly. The murderer got away in the excitement, but the people are trying to run him down.

The Ladies' Committee of the Protestant Home beg to acknowledge with many thanks the following gifts for July:—From Volunteer's dinner, a large quantity of bread; Miss Roger, some corned beef; Mr. Winch, quarter of veal; Mr. White, quarter of lamb, Mrs. Scott, parcel of clothing; large basket of cakes from St. Sabbath School pic-nic.

A correspondent of the Oshawa Reformer says:—As James Dingman, was digging near where there formerly was a building known as "Vanmut's Tavern," on corner of lot No. 1, 4th con. Uxbridge, he turned up a human skull and other remains. Many parties remember a report quite current some 18 or 20 years ago of a pedlar having been last seen alive at that place. The tavern was kept at that time by William Vanzant.

At the Wimbledon shooting match the order of national merit stands: English, Irish, Scotch, Canadian; the Irish coming very close to their anglo saxon brethren. The shooting for the Elcho Shield at 1000 yards stood: Englishmen, 331 points, and total 1,204; Irish, 369 points, total 1,180; only 24 less than England; Scotch, 361, total 1,156. The English made 52, 53 points; Scotch 50 49; Irish 54. At 900 yards the Englishmen made 55, Irish 54. The Scotch and Irish making a "tie." The contest was close.

FIRE ENGINES:—The City of Montreal lately purchased a steam fire engine for $4,469. Peterboro has purchase one at $4,250. Query: Is the one purchased for Peterboro worth two of the one purchased for the city of Montreal? or could a first class engine have been obtained for Peterboro at $2,469? Of course we do not know the price of engines, but learning from a telegram in the Daily Globe that the city of Montreal had got one at $2,469, we wondered why we have to pay nearly twice as much for one for this Town.

FIRE IN THE WOODS:—In several parts of the Country fires are doing considerable damage. We have heard that Mr. Burns, of Emily, lost his barn and all its contents, and also his dwelling house last week, by fire caught from the fires in the woods and swamps near by. Several farmers have had to watch closely to prevent loss of barns, crops and dwellings. In the north of the County of Victoria people have had difficulty in escaping from the burning districts, and some new settlements have suffered severely. We have heard rumors of one or two men having been surrounded with the flames and burned to death.

OPEN AIR PREACHING:—Mr. Douglas Russell, whose name appeared so prominently in a series of Revival sermons in Galt, a year or two ago, preached on the Court House square here, on Sunday last, at half-past three o'clock. He also preached in the morning and evening in the Baptist Church. The three discourses were delivered with great earnestness, and as to doctrine, it would be difficult for the most orthodox to find anything to cavil at. He certainly preaches Christ and Him Crucified, and risen. He had large audiences on Sabbath, and very many were anxious that he should stay awhile in Peterboro rough; but other engagements prevented his doing so now. It is expected however, that ere long he and Mr. Carrol will visit Peterboro, and remain awhile.

HOWES' GREAT LONDON CIRCUS:—On Tuesday next, 22nd inst., the world celebrated equestrian troupe of Howes', and the no less famieus Sanger's English Menagerie of trained animals, will perform in Peterboro—afternoon and evening. They bring with them, direct from England, a full troupe of riders, gymnasts, acrobats, etc., of the very highest class in their profession. The entertainments will be enlivened by the grotesques of three regular English clowns, Messrs. Seal, Jee and Almonti, who are represented to be marvels of wit, humour and originality. The procession into Peterboro, on Tuesday morning, August 22nd, will, from all accounts of our exchanges, be large and magnificent The Asiatic herd of elephants, eight in number, have recently been added to the exhibition, and will appear in the procession through the principal streets, attended by their native keepers in original costume.

An explosion in the Pittston mine, New York, took place on the 14th instant, caused, it is thought, by fire-damp. All in the mine at the time, it is feared, have perished.

"HOME AND HEALTH" is the title of an interesting publication, W. R. Dugay & Brother's, 805, Broadway New York. It is very readable, and contains much useful information on all subjects concerning home and health. Mr. Kidd will supply subscribers. It is only $1.50 a year.

A dissipated character named Kenneth McKenzie, on Sunday week, at Lachine, ate three pounds of pork and a pound of bread. He then drank a quart of ice-water and another quart of Brandy, it is needless to state that he died that night. He was sent there by his friends in England to get rid of him.

The Manitoba Liberal computes the number of school children in Winnipeg at about 60.

The Province of Manitoba has been divided into 12 school districts; on the 18th [of July, Trustees were elected in each district. From all we can learn, the Manitobans have not a single school, although their population is about 17,000, and consequently there must be about 4,000 children, of school age, in the Province. We fear Manitoba is not an Eden yet.

Ireland is not an elysian field yet. There was a serious disturbance on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and others of the Royal Family to Dublin. The police foolishly interfered with a mass meeting of the citizens, who were met to petition for a general amnesty for all the imprisoned Fenians, or other confined for endeavouring to liberate their country.—The action of the police induced a riot, causing several to be wounded, and, perhaps causing the loss of life. The Irish people are trying to make capital of the blunder of the police.

In Londonderry the authorities put astop to a procession of people met to celebrate the anniversary of the relief of Derry. But this the authorities have been doing for years. The people of the Green Isle are green, indeed. If they would drop their bigotry and unite for the redress of municipal and political grievances, they could secure them. Their own religious strife, animosity and mutual jealousies, prevent the realisation of their prayers.

FIRES:—The scene around Fenelon Falls on Monday night, indicated fires in the woods to a considerable extent. The men at Brownlee & Mowry's, and at Green & Ellis's mills had been engaged all the day before preventing the flames from damaging their property, or burning their lumber. Considerable damage has been done in the north of the County of Victoria: indeed, news of the ravages of fires comes to us from all directions northward.

The bridge on the Burleigh road and near the Burleigh bridge, known as the one over the "Blind Channel," was burned on Tuesday morning. There was no fire in the woods near the place at the time.

A correspondent, name unknown, sends us an account of a Bear adventure in Minden last week. Our informant relates that as Mr. John Sedwick, jr., and Mrs. Sedgwick were returning from a visit to Mrs. Sedgwick's father, and while following a foot-path through the woods they suddenly came upon two young bears. These in their haste to get away got too close to Mrs. Sedgwick, and getting entangled in her skirts raised growls which brought mother bear rushing through the woods, "making the hills ring with her roars." But the young bears getting clear made for mammy bear and walked off, leaving Mr., and especially Mrs. Sedgwick, to contemplate more quietly their bear adventure.

By the same letter we learn that the Royal Mail Steamer "Prince of Orange," broke her shaft near Austin's Narrows, on Tuesday, 8th instant.

We cannot vouch for these items, but they have the "ring" of truth about them. To our numerous friends who take an interest in our progress, and desire to send us items of news, we would say, please send us your names also, as a guarrantee that the affairs are not "Cock and Bull stories." The names WILL NOT be published unless so desired. We thankfully receive all items of interest to the public, about crops, deaths, uncommon events in the different localities, short communications on public matters, politics, agriculture, and kindred subjects, of course reserving the right of accepting or not, as in our minds the interest of the public may demand, and always the right to reject personalities, or criticism of a private nature. In criticising the acts of public men a little more latitude is always allowed.

THE LATE FIRE AT GALVIN'S SHOP:—Mr. and Mrs. O'Shea called on us on Saturday and asked us to publish their evidence in the matter of the late inquest. They bitterly complained that the Review has done great injustice in its remarks anent the investigation, and only wish the matter put in its right light before the public. If the Review would dismiss political spleen for a season, it would be in a position to give more candid criticism on men and things, than it has done since the late election in more cases than on its strictures on the fires, and on the evidence of "the O'Shea's," as they are styled.

The journalist should ever be ready to do justly, and with a desire to do Mr. and Mrs. O'Shea justice, we gladly state that we heard Mr. and Mrs. O'Shea give their evidence in the case, and saw no intention or apparent intention on their part to keep back truth—but we have heard of Mrs. O'Shea refusing to answer Mr. Carnegie's questions, as he was neither Coroner, Lawyer, nor Juryman, yet appeared to act as monitor through the whole investigation. Too great a desire to convict a particular party may now and then lead particular men to write, do and say things that would be as well undone, unsaid and unwritten, but such conduct seldom, if ever, serves the ends of justice or leads to the conviction of the right parties; of course it affords opportunity for pouring out over-flowing vessels of wrath against those who are often more just than the avengers.

The late fires occurred in some, yet unknown way—the inquest failed to make the origin of the fire any more certain, and it did appear a piece of folly to order an investigation, unless the matter had been better "worked up" than this case was. Street talk, corner gossip, or the insinuations of perhaps, enemies, form poor bases to found a coroner's inquest on.

OUR UNION SCHOOL opened yesterday under very favorable auspices; A large number having again resumed their places in the different classes. The changes effected since the examination are not few. Mr. McFaul, Mr. Braden and Miss Beattie have left altogether. Miss Borrowman has been promoted to Miss Beattie's place, and Miss Dowling to Miss Borrowman's place. Miss May Boucher taking Miss Dowling's place. Mr. Taylor has been promoted to Mr. McFaul's place; Mr. B. C. Dixon, of Norwood, takes Mr. Taylor's place; and Mr. Braden's place is filled by his brother we understand. Other changes are anticipated. Mr. Clark has been offered a situation as head master of a High School, and we hear intends accepting it; in which case Mr. Black, of the Port Hope school, will take Mr. Clark's place we believe. Mr. Clark has not been long in Peterboro, but during his short stay has made many friends. He is of a kind and gentlemanly character, highly esteemed by all the teachers, and by all who have made his acquaintance, and will, no doubt, prove an efficient teacher in his new sphere.

The progress of the Peterboro Grammar School during the past three years has surpassed the expectations of the people of Peterboro. Four years ago the average attendance was less than 40, now it is over 120, or three times as many. The grant then was less than $700, now it is $2,560. This is about one half of the entire salaries of the teachers, and as soon as the School is declared a Collegiate Institute, at least $750 more will be obtained from government, so that the expenses of the Grammar School cannot become burdensome. We hear it stated that there is an intention to put increased fees on those attending the High School, but this can be only a rumor. The putting on of fees is contrary to the tendencies of the age, and as they cannot be required to meet the outlay for High School purposes, it may be questionable whether they could be collected for Public School purposes. Twenty cents on each pupil per month will realise $1,000 a year; so that from government and from the pupils over $4,000 a year are realised, the balance cannot be a heavy tax on the Ratepayers. The prosperous state of the Peterboro School is largely due to the indefatigable and successful labours of the excellent Principal, Mr. Dixon.

The Late Examinations of School Teachers.

The press everywhere through the province teems with letters criticising the regulations under which the late examinations were conducted, and in no measured terms, condemning the papers as too difficult, or as not at all suited to test the qualifications of candidates. There never has been a sudden change of management of any enterprise that has not produced nearly similar results to those now experienced by teachers. The programme of studies is not at all too high, even under the New School Law; and against the character and justice of the Central Board—Messrs. Young, McKenzie and McLennan—nothing can be fairly adduced.

The papers for candidates for third class certificates are not of such a nature that men of ordinary education and fair mental powers could not easily answer, except perhaps in one or two instances, that is, if moderate attention had been given to preparation. The only question that is reasonably debatable between the Central Board and the teachers is:—Has the Board given sufficient time for reasonable preparation, and for obtaining the standard books referred to in the programme prepared by the Board of Public Instruction? This must be answered in the negative.

The Arithmetic papers were solved by the Board of Examiners in about an hour. This, however, is not a fair test as to the difficulty or ease with which the Candidates should solve the same questions. But Teachers boasting of attainments should not be the first to complain, as is more or less the case throughout the province.

The great cause for complaint is in reference the grading of teachers. No teacher—no matter how well qualified—can apply for a second or first class certificate unless he has taught three years in case of a second, and five years in case of a first class certificate. And then they must have held a third or second grade as the case may be. These regulations will drive many men of talent out of the profession altogether. No young man of ambition and education will submit to be forced to teach five years before he can get a first-class certificate. It is true that if he has attended the Normal School one session, it is all right, and here the law finds a method of compelling men to attend an institution they may dispise, perhaps. The superannuated teachers' fund is also a disgrace to the statute book of Ontario. The law should be amended to meet these and similar cases of injustice as soon as possible.

Railroads.

Ere long the Railway Committee will be prepared to report favorable in reference to a plan for resuscitating the Cobourg road, and also in reference to extension to the back lakes.

Several meetings have been held, and the committee have communicated with the Grand Junction Directors, and also with the Cobourg Company, and in the latter case are only waiting the return home of the deputation to receive a definite proposition. We believe we are right in saying that they have been favorably impressed with what they saw at Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, and we believe too, that Fenelon Falls is in their opinion the proper present terminus for the Cobourg and Peterboro Road, with a view to extension farther west, ere long.

Some fear that to direct our energies in that direction would tend to delay, if not defeat, the Haliburton road. This need not be so. The road to Mud Lake may be so much of both roads. At Mud Lake or Bobcaygeon the Haliburton road may take its own direction, and no obstacle need be thrown in the way of its completion as soon as possible. It appears to us that if the Cobourg and Peterboro road were extended to Bobcaygeon with running powers for the Haliburton road, that it would just be so much more of the Haliburton road constructed. Indeed it would not be wise to long delay the construction of the Haliburton road, but it would be the height of madness to allow the Haliburton scheme to kill the extension to Bobcaygeon and to Fenelon Falls.

The argument that a road to Bobcaygeon would be injurous to Peterboro may be successfully answered by refering to the road to Lakefield. What is it doing to hurt Peterborough? Not a cents worth in the year. Peterborough Merchants have the lead too far to fear the result of improvement in the neighboring village. Building up Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls would only be creating better markets for the Peterborough trade; and be doing so much more towards building up the town. To put the matter off till more experience shall enable us to form clearer judgment on the matter is nothing more or less than affording a fair opportunity to others to step in and carry off the prize that we are too sceptical to believe in, or too timid to reach out our hand and make our own.

The people of Peterboro are fully alive to the advantages these enterprizes would bring to themselves, and they are looking to the Railway Committee and the Council to secure them as speedily and cheaply as possible.

The fears and jealousies of the Haliburton people need not cause obstruction to the Fenelon Falls scheme, and on the contrary no barrier need be thrown in the way of the Haliburton scheme. Let both proceed simultaneously.

Railroad to Mud Lake, Bobcaygeon, and Fenelon Falls.

As our readers are aware, an effort is being made towards the resuscitation of the Cobourg and Peterboro Railroad—and to that end, Committees have been appointed by both the Towns interested.

On Friday evening, a telegram was received from Cobourg, that Messrs. Schoenberger, a large Stock and Bond holder in the Cobourg & Marmora Railroad and Mining Company, Col. Chamblias, the President and Managing Director of that road, the Mayor of Cobourg, and others were about to visit Peterboro, Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, for the purpose of witnessing the prospects of those places, and considering the propriety of re-opening the road, and extending it to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, if possible.

A meeting of the Peterboro Railway Committee was held on Saturday evening, when it was agreed to receive the Deputation handsomely, and take them to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls.

On Monday, Mr. Schoenberger, Col. Chamblias, Mayor Kerr, of Cobourg, J. D. Armour, Esq., J. H. Dumble, Esq., Mr. Barber and Messrs. Jex, Battell and Dixon of the Cobourg Council, and Mr. Hough, of the World, Mr. McAlister, of the Sentinel and Mr. J. Sutherland, arrived at Peterboro, and were met by T. M. Fairbairn, M. P. P., Mayor Scott, and Councillors Edmison, English and Henthorn, and the Warden, the Councillors of Ashburnham; Mr. Ludgate and Mr. W. A. Scott, C. Perry, M. P., and Capt. Sutherland, and members of the Railway committee, and proceeded in carringes to Mud Lake, and thence by the popular Steamer "Ogemah" to the Back Lakes.

Captain Wallis provided Dinner on the Boat in tip-top style, and after the delays and the ride, a good appetite enabled all the parties to do ample justice to the Captains generous and sumptuous fare.

The party arrived at Bobcaygeon about 3 o'clock, and headed by Mr. Boyd, they visited his new mill; she seems to be in full operation, cutting, we are told, about 40,000 feet every 12 hours, and thus averaging somewhere near 15,000,000 feet yearly. Mr. Boyd, we understand, is going to add another gang to those already in the Mill, and of course he will then be prepared to do a largely increased work. W. B. Read, Esq., of that place, accompanied our party to the Falls. The whole thing was got up on such short notice that the good people of the Village were scarcely aware of the coming of the Deputation. After a short stay we proceeded:

Entering Sturgeon Lake the smoke completely concealed both sky and land, and in consequence the "Ogemah" had to proceed with considerable caution; the Captain keeping a lively look-out least by too close approach to land, snags or shallows, the day's pleasure should be lessoned by, the not gery desirable alternative of, a night on Sturgeon Lake, contrary to the general wish. All, however, went on well, and we arrived at the Falls in good time, with out any serious adventure to record, other than what is usual on such occasions.

On our way up we saw in the smoky dusk the mills of Messrs. Brownlee and Mowry, capable of cutting at least 40 to 50,000 feet a day; also, the mills of Messrs Green & Ellis, capable of cutting as much if not more than the Brownlee & Mowry mills, and at Fenelon there are two large mills, owned by Smith & Elliot, capable of cutting as much as the former mills. At Fenelon Falls, and neighborhood, therefore, somewhere about 40,000,000 feet must be cut every year. Taking Buckhorn, Bobcaygeon and Fenelon mills there cannot be less than 70,000,000 to 80,000,000 feet manufactured annually. This immense lumber traffic now goes by way of Lindsay and Port Hope, and must bring in a revenue of $100,000 to $120,000 annually. to the Midland Company, and this independent of passengers, grain and other freight. But this is a divergence. On our arrival all were taken to the Quebec and Ottawa House, a very fine Hotel near the landing. The building is nearly new, and would do credit to any of the ambitions towns of Province. Here a very fine spread was provided and was discussed pretty freely. After which some toasts and speeches were the order of the day, or rather evening.

Mr. Fairbairn presiding in a most able and agreeable manner. The "Queen," the "Prince of Wales," the Royal family," were very neatly given and warmly received by all present.

Mr. Fairbairn then proposed the health of the President of the United States.

To which Mr. Schoenberger replied: After returning thanks for the honor thus done to him and his country, he remarked that the object of the trip was to see the prospects for a railroad, if opened up to Peterboro from Cobourg, and extended northward. They wanted to learn if they would be justified in expending a large sum of money in the enterprise. He expressed himself highly pleased with what he had seen, and said that it would receive the consideration it demanded.

To the toast, "The Directors of the Cobourg, Peterboro Railway and Mining Company," Col. Chamblias responded:—He stated the object of the visit to the back waters—and said as the managing Director of the present works, he felt inclined to do what he could in resuscitating the road and extending it back; but it was all a matter of business. If he saw that the trade prospects were such as to ensure a fair return on the investment necessary, he would not hesitate to advise undertaking the work and pushing it through to a successful issue. He was pleased with what he had seen since leaving Cobourg, and felt that there was a trade sufficient to indemnify the earnest consideration of undertaking the construction, and that he would do what he could to have the work receive the attention its importance demanded.

"The Mayor and Corporation of the Town of Cobourg," being given

W. Kerr, Esq., Mayor of Cobourg, returned thanks on behalf of himself and the Corporation. He felt pleased to hear Col. Chamblias and Mr. Schoenberger speak so decidedly in the matter of resuscitating the old road, and knew that they spoke as they felt and he knew too, that what they said was honest. He was interested in the resuscitation of the road as a Cobourg man, and he believed that it would largely benefit Cobourg and Peterboro. He fondly hoped that ere long the two places would be re-united. He had learnthe cause of the alienation of the Peterboro people, but he trusted that no such acts would ever again be repeated. He would blush if they were. He then spoke in the most favorable terms of the earnest action and successful efforts of Mr. John Dumble on behalf of the interests of Cobourg, and said that no man in Cobourg was entitled to more credit than he—as but for him the present road would not exist. He had spent thousands of dollars of his own money, to get something done toward reopening the road in part—and but for him it never would have been done, as he had got men to take hold of it and work it. He also believed Col. Chamblias perfectly honest in what he said, and he trusted that the earnest, united and continued labors of Peterboro, Cobourg and the Company, would ere long lead to the success of the enterprise they were met to promote.

Messrs. Jex, Battel and Dixon of the Council also returned thanks on behalf of the Council.

Mr. Carnegie proposed, "The Guests," which was responded to by Mr. Armour and J. H. Dumble, both expressing their sincere wish for the enterprise. Mr. Dumble referred to the early history of the old road, and its annual traffic of about half a million of lumber, compared with present prospects, and to the insane policy of the Midland road in driving away two of our best mills and not less than 500 of our population. He was much in favor of getting to Bobcaygeon, and eventually to Fenelon Falls, as it would only require 31 miles of a road to complete this much desired object, and he hoped that all would set to work and get the road to Mud Lake, with a view to western extension soon.

Mr. Calcutt spoke favorably of the position Ashburnham was taking in the matter and thought Peterborough should come out boldly.

Mayor Kerr, of Cobourgh, then gave "the Mayor and Corporation of Peterborough." In the absence of the Mayor Councillor Edmison returned thanks. He expressed himself favorable to the road, and believed Peterborough would do her duty in the matter. He was of opinion that they should get to Mud Lake, and of course further, and he saw no trouble it the terminus could be agreed on.

"The prosperity of Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls," was proposed by Mr. Stratton, coupling with it the names of W. B. Read, Esq., of Bobcaygeon, and Dr. Bingham, of Fenelon. Both gentlemen replied. Mr. Read thought the sympathies of Bobcaygeon were with the Bowmanville scheme, but he was in no wise committed. The first road would no doubt secure the support of the people.

Dr. Bingham returned thanks on behalf of Fenelon, expressing his regret that the Council had not been aware of the meeting or he believed they would be present.

Dr. Kincaid proposed the health of Capt. Wallis, who had so abundantly provided for them during the day, and landed them safely at the Falls. He referred to Mr. Wallis as the first founder of the Village of Fenelon Falls, and as having spent large sums for its prosperity.

Capt. Wallis made a very suitable reply.

After other volunteer toasts had been given parties sought for resting places, but owing to the good humor that prevailed down stairs, in the way of speeches, chitchat, the discussion of the "goose question," and other matters foreign to railway enterprize, Morpheus could not be entreated to lend his magic powers.

At four o'clock next morning all were on board again, and as Messrs. Schoenberger and Col. Chamblias wished to see Lindsay, Capt. Wallis took all safely to that port before seven o'clock, when the company divided a little, a part going by railway, and the balance returning by boat.

Tuesday was delightful, a nice shower having tempered the air, drove away the smoke, and rendered the lakes delightfully pleasant and smooth. Everything was propitious on the trip homeward, and the party seemed to enjoy themselves, dinner, toasts, speeches and friendly conversation occupying the whole trip. Capt. Wallis was untiring in his efforts to make them happy and to ensure their return to Peterboro in time for the train, in which he succeeded.

Prince Arthur is to be created Duke of Connaught.

The Picton Gazette says the crops this year in Prince Edward Country will be double that of last year.

A fire alarm telegraph has been added to the Toronto fire department at a cost of $40,000.

It is said there are 200,000 natives of Ireland in New York City besides children born of Irish parent, who are called American citizens.

"FAIR PLAY":—A correspondent from Norwood sends us a communication signed "Fair Play," with a request to publish it. He will please excuse us for hesitating to do so. It reflects severely on a late opponent for the honors of the "Inspectorship," and to write without provocation or publish letters might appear as undue persecution, on our part, and would consequently engender undue feelings of ill-will, no doubt, which we wish to avert. Had he pursued a consistent course in the past a single line would never have appeared against him by us. We hope, therefore, that "Fair Play"—a very respectable friend, will excuse at present—unless he believes that the public weal demands it, and then we will not hesitate a moment.

A Disgraceful Swindle.

A letter in the Globe lately gives an account of the way in which some are permitted to rob the government and the country. The writer who was engaged on a survey at 60 cents per day, was asked to sign a receipt for 75 cents per day, although he was only receiving 60 cents. He refused to do so, when others without reluctance did. The surveyer pocketing the extra 15 cents daily. This was made known at Toronto in the Crown Land Department, but only elicited the information that their friends were now and then permited to draw a little extra pay by this means. Mr. Fryer, whom the official sought to induce to sign the false report, met with nothing but abuse for his trouble of letting the department know how matters were being conducted by the dishonest P. L. S.

Is this the way the money goes? Is this the way government support is secured? Can it be possible that men are solicited to sign false returns, and that when it is made known it is concealed or laughed at, or the informer insulted? Reports have reached our ears that even this County has been the scene of such transactions. It is hard to believe such reports, yet there might be some truth in them. To name parties without being able to prove the guilt might lead to trouble, but if we can find reasonable proof the names of parties will be given. We have been told that sometimes Duplicate pay-sheets are kept and both signed by workmen. One of these is generally signed in blank to save the principal an extra call on the men.—The Overseer, on pay day has another pay sheet signed, with the true sums in it, we suppose. The previous blank one can be filled in at leisure—to suit the parties, and to suit the taste of the book-keeper. Lump sums of these pay sheets are made out and returned, and pay received. These lump sums only, are made public. The items, like the passwords of secret societies, are only for the initiated. Our informant pointed out one such sum that he asserted was "cooked up" to the amount of about $180. We cannot yet say this is absolutely so—but ask can it be so? and if so, will not some honest man expose it?

Scott Centenary.

The Centenary of Sir Walter Scott was celebrated in the Music Hall, on Tuesday evening last. The attendance was not so large as might be expected on such an occasion, owing, no doubt, to the unsettled state of the weather. Mr. Carnegie, President of the St. Andrew's Society, occupied the chair, and opened the proceedings by an address. The entertainment throughout was a very good one, and judging from the repeated applause of the audience, they were, no doubt, highly delighted with the evening's performance.

The addresses of A. H. Campbell, Esq., and J. B. Dixon, M. A., were learned in diction, and eloquently delivered. The Singing by Miss Cottingham, Miss Griffith and Mr. Galletly, was excellent, receiving the greatest applause. The recitation of "Roderick Dhu," by Mr. R. Way,—was well done; and Mr. Haggart's Reading, was very entertaining. The programme was good and well carried out. Mr. Rackett's string band added much to the success.

The following lines by W. Telford, Esq., Smith, Bard of the St. Andrew's Society were read on the occasion.

In seventeen hundred and seventy one
The life of our great poet began.
In August on the fifteenth day,
A new-born babe Sir Walter lay.
From history we his birth-place find,
In Edinburgh old college wind.
Old city proudly raise your head,
Your son we praise, though long since dead.
Methinks I see that mother mild
Caress and kiss her infant child.
Or hear that joyful father speak,
He smiles and smoothes his tender cheek,
While viewing that babe, would they suppose
The height of fame to which he rose?
Not stature, but in genius bright,
Which stirs up Scots to meet to-night.
Though he did walk with halting tread,
No want nor halt was in his head.
His father trained him for the bar,
But soon the muse put all ajar;
To study law's, dull rig-ma-roll,
Was death to his poetic soul.
He snapped that sluggish, galling chain
And burst forth in poetic strain;
Whether in poetry or in prose
The rich effusion freely flows;
His thoughts skim o'er the ocean wide,
Or nurse the muse by the Lake side.
His fancy grasps the highest hill,
Descends to view the murmuring rill.
He soothe the minstrels with his lay,
And wipes the tear of grief away.
He sits among the broom and brake
To watch the Lady of the Lake;
Or the fierce bloody combat view,
Between Fitz James and Roderick Dhu.
The warriors' deeds, with sword and shield;
The carnage wild on Flodden field;
The maiden feasts in Ancient hall.
His able pen surveys them all.
We laugh to read his joking lays,
In Scotia's superstitious days.
Auld wives saw ghosts at every turn,
And kelpes peeped from every burn.
Departed spirits, dressed in white,
Appeared to friends at dead of night;
Hobgoblins jumped from cliffs and cairns,
While fairies stole folk's bonnie bairns.
His pen the blood-stained gleam display
While persecution bore the sway,
Usurpers, tyrants, murdered, free,
Or Glencoe's cold blood massacre.
He scans the borders of the Tweed
From fair Carlisle to Spital Head;
Each ruined Castle, Turret, Tower,
*Cavern Cave, or Lady's bower.

The Hon. Mr. Trutch, lately Surveyor General of that Province, has been appointed the first Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia.

Batavia papers received by the overland mail, via India, contains details of a dreadful calamity which has visited the small island of Tagolanda, in the Malay archipelago, about 80 miles northeast of the island of Celebes. The outburst of the volcano Rawang was accompanied by a concussion of the sea, and a wave 40 yards in height swept all the human beings, cattle and houses from the island. The number of persons who perished is stated at about 416.

THE NEW SCHOOL LAW:—The new law enacted by the last Legislature of the United States, providing for the establishment of free public schools throughout the State of New York, alters the mode hitherto in existence of raising money for their support. The law of 1867, authorizing each township to raise the money for the the schools, has been repealed, and the new law provides that for the purpose of maintaining free public schools there shall be assessed, levied and collected annually from the inhabitants of the State, and upon the taxable real and personal property thereon, a State school tax if two mills on each dollar, and shall be line of all township school taxes. The law further provides that if the money raised in this summer is not sufficient in any township to sustain the schools, for at least nine months in each year, then the inhabitants of such such township are to raise the required sum in the former way. Should any person refuse or neglect to do so, the State Board of Education shall withhold its apportionment of the revenues of the State from such township and divide it with the others complying with the act.

"Little breakdowns" to our Constitutions.

The story is told of a man who had for years carried an old and cherished watch about him, who one day called on its maker, and told him it was no longe useful, for it would not keep time correctly.

"Let me examine it," said the maker; and taking a powerful glass, he looked carefully into the works till he spied just one little grain of sand.

"I have it," he said, "I can get over your difficulty."

About this moment, by some powerful but unseen power the little grain, suspected what was coming, cried out, let me alone! I am but a small thing, and take up so little room. I cannot possibly injure the watch. Twenty or thirty of us might do harm, but I cannt so let me alone."

The watchmaker replied, "You must come out, for you spoil my work, and all the more so because you are small, and but a few people can see you."

This story is suggestive to those who would care well for their physicial health. The little causes must be looked for.—There are the errors in diet, the little violations in our habits of exercise, study, sleep, dress; sct., sct. The wise and prudent will carefully attend to the little things.

A Suicide.

A young girl named Emma Green, aged sixteen, a resident of London, committed suicide on the 2nd inst., under most painful circumstances. From the account in the Free Press we gather the following particulars: The girl had lately returned to her home from Detroit where she was living with a sister and going to school. She did not appear to live on good terms with her mother who had frequently chastised her, and complained of her not doing her work. On the afternoon of the 2nd, the mother and daughter had a quarrel about some ironing work which the child was expected to do, but had not done, and the result was the infliction of punishment by the mother.—The precise degree of the beating may be discovered. The mother says she gave her only two slaps on the shoulder, while the discorded testimony of the deceased says that she was "almost killed." It is certain that under the pain and mortification of the beating received from her mother for a slight offence, and under dread of a public chastisement at her hands, she took a dose of strychnine and died in untold agonies.—The quantity she took was enough to kill twenty men or more.

The following letter from deceased was produced at the Coroner's investigation:

"Mother, I have poisoned myself and I hope I will go to heaven to live. You have always licked me for only nothing, and to day you almost killed me for not having your skirt ironed, but you will never have me to do the same to. So good-by mother, I hope I shall meet you in heaven. I have poisoned myself."

On the back of the envelope was further writen:—

"I have poisoned myself because I dreaded you coming home.

"Good-by, mother I hope—

"Don't treat my sister and brother as you have treated me."

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR,—

In the last issue of the Peterboro Review, I was really astonished at reading its editorial. You will therefore permit me a few lines regarding the gross misrepresentation and ignorance displayed by that biassed and not very learned Editor, the mendicant Mr. Carnegie. Speaking of the investigation concerning the fire in Mr. Galvin's Shop, this untair and partial man publishes as followsin that filthy sheet, the Review. He says:

"It was no justification for the manner in which the O'Shea's gave their evidence, and Mrs. O'Shea in particular; and the only effect of her conduct and evasive answers was to create the impression that there was something to hide—something which they were determined not to tell." He says again, "That the friends of Galvin exhibited a disinclination to give evidence which would in any way criminate him. For these reasons as well as because it was of a contradictory character, we feel disposed to look upon the O'Shea's evidence as unworthy of much consideration."—

This, Mr. Editor, is the opinion of the none, bigoted Editor. Now I ask you, sir, and the public at large, is this a fair statement of the matter? I think not. If this man was a gentleman, a scholar, or an impartial writer, it would have been fairer to publish the evidences before the Coroner and let an impartial and intelligent public judge for themselves. This would be fairer than to have that poor creature comment on the evidences himself. I consider it, and pronounce it to be unfair. It is one-sided, it is partial, it is bigoted. It shows a spirit of animosity and revenge. The point is, Mr. Editor, this creature has dragged politics into the question. O'Shea turned his back to him at the last election because he saw he had broken his solemn promises with his friends, consequently thought it a disgrace to keep him in power any longer,

This miserable narrow minded soul insinuates that if the O'Shea's told what they knew about the fire in Galvin's Shop there would be sufficient proof to remand him for trial to a high court. Besides, he said to me that Cullen's evidence is sufficient to condemn him in a court of law.

Mr. Editor, it is for this man now to prove what the O'Shea's have not told!—This new light of the Review, can he prognosticate? Can he read what the O'Shea's know in their hearts about this fire? Is this poisonous Editor a Prophet? if he is, he had better clear off to some foreign country, as a Prophet gets but little credit in his own. To shew you this bigot has not put the matter fair and square before the public, after reading the Review I met the Coroner and asked him if he had seen it, he said yes, and that he was really astonished at Mr. Carnegie to put before the public such a falsehood, and that he was ready to contradict his statement, and besides that he would let me have a copy of the evidences. I am credibly informed that Mr. Moore and others who were present at the Investigation were greatly displeased at his conduct in this matter.

The writer of that filthy rag, the Review, where did he get his education? The answer is, in the Township of Douro. Never had a profession of any kind, any more than the spade, the cradle and the axe; he gets too lazy to work; makes for the Town of Peterborough, some fine moonlight night, and in a few years, you would think by his pride, vanity, self-conceit and ostentation, that he was the Duke of Argyle. He should be made retract his views, otherwise he must be under the impression that an honest and intelligent jury did not understand their business.

A portion of the public, I suppose, will think it is presumption on my part to reply to this his false and cowardly assusations; as some of my friends have told me to put my foot on the matter and let it pass unnoticed. This I will not do; the very snail that crawls the earth, if you tread on it, shows its instinct by raising its horns; consequently, when trod upon by a creature whose venom is poison, I consider, if I overlooked the matter it would be cowardly.

It is said that a man is known by his company. For the last twenty years I have resided in Peterboro, and I defy man, woman or child, for that time, to see me or any of my family keep bad company.—I have not in that time been before a magistrate or judge of the land either as plaintiff or defendant. I can walk the streets of Peterboro, and say I have done nothing that I need feel ashamed of. All that can be said to me is that I am a poor man. I have obeyed the law of the land as well as the law of my God. Of course, Mr. Editor, this is my own statement, but every man in Peterboro that knows me and mine, will endorse what I say. Not to defend myself against the insinuations of this poltroon who is a thousand degrees beneath me, would be cowardly. I think he must be in the first stages of insanity.

I am sorry, Mr. Editor, for trespassing so much on your valuable space. In conclusion, I am prepared to solemnly swear that I know no more about the fires in Galvin's shop than I have sworn to already before the Coroner and jury. My whole family can swear the same for themselves. This is my solemn statement, so let an intelligent and impartial public judge for themselves. With these remarks I subscribe myself,

Yours, &c.,
JOHN O'SHEA.

Peterboro, Aug. 15, 1871.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner:

DEAR SIR:—I have been quite delighted with the wisdom and economy displayed by our town Council in their new and improved style of sidewalks. Judging from the few weeks of trials they have already had, I should suppose shat they are never likely to wear out, at least not as long as there is a board walk on the other side of the street, or a road in the middle.

I think Sir that the ratepayers would have no objection to gratefully permit the originators and promoters of this great scheme to lay similar sidewalks in front of their own doors, and would propose as a good place to begin operations, the north side of Simcoe street, between George and Aylmer streets, as this would accomodate several of these economical members of the Council at once

Hoping this proposition may meet with public approval.

I remain yours, &c.,

SPECIAL NOTICES.

From observations under the Microscope of the blood of patients using Fellows' Compound syrup of Hypophosphites, taken from time, to time, positive been obtained of the steady removal of disesed and dead blood particles and the substitution of vitalised discs, so necessary to the construction of healthy muscle.

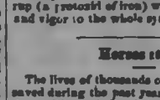
☞ The efficacy of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers in curing Coughs, Colds, and all Bronchial affections, and cheering the afflicted, has passed into a proverb. In the United States, where those marvellous wafers are known they bear down all oppo ition and eclipse all rivalry the demand for them has steadily increased for the last twenty years, untill now the sales average over one hundred boxes a year.—Eminent members of the medical profession without number admit that they know of no preparation producing such beneficial results as those wafers. When taken in season they effect a perpanent cure. Sold by all medicine dealers at 25 cents a box.

☞ Natural Unification, as it is called—the joining together of the various portions of a race into one compact whole—is one of the farvate political theories of the day, and millions dollars have been emcirgced in different countries for that subject: but wheathar the result will justify the expenditure, time alone can tell. But this we do know, about the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." every one who uses it speaks in the highest terms of its virtues and pain removing qualities. For rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, cholic, cramps and summer complaints, it has no equal. For sale by Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cents a cottle.

Over-Exertion, either of body or mind, produces debility and and disease. The usual remedy is to take some stimulant, the effect of which is giving a tired horse the whips instead of oats. The true way is to fortify the system with a permanent tonic like the Peruvian Syrup (a protoxid of iron) which gives strength and vigor to the whole system.

Horses saved.

The lives of thousands of horses have been saved during the past year, and the credit is due to "Darley's Doubtless Powder and Arabian Hearse Remedy." This preparation has been extensively used, and extracts from all the highest praise. Nothing of the kind has ever before been half so successful or given such universal satisfaction; it cannot be equaled. We can confidently recommend it and would advise all who own horses to keep a supply on hand—it may be the means of saving your horses life. Remember the name and see that the signature of Hard & Co., is on each package. Northrop & Lyman Newcastle, Ont., Proprietors for Canada. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.



Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the Pain-Killer. The Parson's wife and Mrs Judge Jones are very, positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did al, it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fasion. for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recomend the Pain-Killer, every where I go they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' legent came around, (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear!

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The Pain-Killer does not profess to cure everything either in the Dirabout the bottle or the "Annual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence, Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whose testimony cannot be doubted.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are Bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods,

Wife:—Judde Jones was so incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Son and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificate secived from parties within five miles of his own house.

Sold every where price 25 cents a bottle.

'The simple story I believe,' said the doctor, [illegible] Carleton, [illegible] was busy. She had seen a shade of life that touched her heart.

'You are better for this ride,' remarked the doctor, as he handed her from the carriage.

'I think so,' replied Mrs. Carleton.'

'You have not been so fine a colour on your face for months.'

'They had stabled their fine horses, and were sitting in one of her luxurious parlors.

'Shall I tell you why?' added the doctor.

Mrs. Carleton bowed.

'You have had some healthy heart-ache.' She did not answer.

'And I pray you dear madam,—let the storms go on,' continued Dr. Fairleigh.

'Let your mind become interested in some good work, and your hands obey your thoughts, and you will be a healthier woman in body and soul. Your disease, madam, is mental inaction.'

Mrs. Carleton looked steadily at the doctor.

'You are in earnest,' she said in a calm, firm way.

'Wholly in earnest, madam. I found you [illegible] so weak a state that to life your hand with an exhaustive effort.—[illegible] every muscle tightly strung. When will your carriage come home?'

He asked the closing question abruptly.

'To-morrow,' was replied.

'Then I will not call for you, but——' He hesitated.

'Say on, doctor.'

'Will you take my prescription?'

'Yes.' There was no hesitation.

'Go at once give that sick woman a ride into the country. The fresh, pure, blooming country air will do her good, may, indeed, turn the balance of health in her favor. Don't be afraid of Mrs. McFlimsey.'

'For shame, doctor!' But you are too late in your suggestion. I'm quite ahead of it.'

'Ah! In what respect?'

'That drive into the country is already a settled thing. Do you know I am in love with that baby?'

'Othello's occupation's gone,' I see!' replied the doctor, rising. 'But I may visit you occasionally as a friend, I presume, if not as a medical adviser?'

'Friends always,' said Mrs. Carleton, with feeling. 'You have led me out of myself, and showed me the way to health and happiness; and I have settled the question as to my future. It shall not be as the past.' And it was not.

Weather Rhymes.

The old settlers of New England preserved some of the old English rhymes and prophecies of coming weather. Some of them are so often true as to be now considered almost infallible.

When the glow-worm lights her lamp,
Then the air is always damp.

If the cock goes crowing to bed,
He's sure to rise with a wet head.

When black snails cross your path,
The next clouds much moisture hath.

When the peacock loudly bawls,
Soon we'll have both rain and squalls.

When ye see the gossamer flying,
Then be sure the air is drying.

A rosy sunset presages good weather; a ruddy sunrise bad weather.

A bright yellow sky in the evening indicates wind; a pale yellow sky in the evening indicates wet.

A neutral gray color at evening is a favorable sign; in the morning, an unfavorable one.

The clouds all soft and feathery, betoken [illegible] weather.

A rainbow in the morning
Gives the shepherd warning.

That is if the wind be easily; because it shows that the rain-cloud is approaching the observer.

If at sunrising or setting the clouds appear of a lurid red color, extending nearly to the zenith, it is a sure sign of storms and gales of wind.

The Barrie Examiner has been criticising the press Association, and Mr. R. Mathison, (Beautiful Expositer) the Secretary, has a letter in the Daily Telegraph in reply. The complaint is made that the Association seems to have gone over all to one side, the Opposition side, to which we have heard it replied that if editors on the Government side had only allowed themselves to be brought forward they would have been "there" too. It is as well, perhaps, that attention has been drawn to some alleged causes of a little unpleasantness, but we should learn that it would be better not to harp too much on such strings as those. We still think, as we thought at the time, that Sir Francis Hincks' invitation of the officials and leading ex officials of the Association, to breakfast should have been accepted, coming as it did from an old editor, who in office own calling won his spurs, raising subsequently to be a Minister of the Crown.—We all think that had half a dozen or a dozen of the older members of the Association taken an hour or so with Sir Francis at breakfast their ladies would have got along passably well notwithstanding, during their brief absence, while the programme for the day would not have been materially interfered with. As for the fact—for it is a fact—of the official control of the Association having during this year or two back passed over almost wholly to the Reform side we think the Conservative editors have mostly to blame themselves for being so "slack-wood in coming forward." Let us hope that next year will see the balance restored, in which the earliest years of the Association was instinctively felt even though not spoken of as necessary. Peples Journal

An incident.—Little Maime, just three years old, was dying. The last but one of six lovely little lambs, who had been gathered into the bosom of the good shepherd, safe, forever safe, from a touch of sorrow or a throb of pain. Just before her grandfather, a noble minister, had, "passed over the river," through the eternal gate, and entered into her rest.

"You will soon see dear grandpa, darling," said the kind watcher. "You are going to heaven."

"Yes, I know," was the quick reply. "I too little to open the door. I can't reach it; but grand a will open the door for me!"

A little good-bye and she had strayed the door for her own little angel, and permitted her to catch a glimpse of the sweet family face she had loved so well, and which now waited to welcome her home forever.

A Fiend.—Richard Handell, residing about six miles from Fredonia, in Southern Kansas, a few days since beat his little girl, aged six years, to death. His son swore that the father had frequently whipped the girl until she became insensible; that he very often denied to his family the food necessary to sustain life, and that it was no uncommon thing for him to whip the entire family in the most shocking manner.—The boy also stated that his mother's death was caused by an inhuman treatment from her husband, and that when his sister was killed, his father threatened to kill him if he mentioned a word in regard to the affair.—The citizens were greatly excited, and at first accounts there appeared to be no doubt that Handell would be lynched.

Since the 12th the ancient order of Hibernians has been at work recruiting. New Irish militia regiments have also been organized because, as the promoters say, the Irish people should place themselves in a position to be able at any time to defend the Republic from all enemies both foreign and domestic, to resist the inroads of despotism or monarchial institutions.

Choice Poetry.

Not Lost.

The book of sympathy, the gentle word,
Spoken so low that only angels heard;
The secret act of pure self-sacrifice,
Unseen by men, but marked by angels eyes
These are not lost,

The sacred music of a tender strain,
Wrung from a poet's heart by grief and pain,
And chanted timidly with doubts and fear
To busy crowds, who scarcely pause to hear;
It is not lost.

The silent tears that fall at dead of night,
Over soiled robes which once were pure and white;
The prayers that rise like incense from the soul,
Longing for Christ to make it pure and whole
These are not lost.

The happy dreams that gladdened all our youth,
When dreams had less of self and more of truth;
The childlike faith, so tranquil and so sweet,
Which sat like Mary at the Master's feet;
These are not lost.

The kindly plans devised for others' good,
So seldom guessed, so little understood;
The quiet, steadfast love that strove to win
Some wanderer from the woeful ways of sin
These are not lost.

Not lost, O Lord, for in the city bright
Our eyes shall see the past by clearer light;
And things long hidden from our gaze below
Then will reveal, and we shall surely know—
They were not lost.

At a recent session of one of the courts of South Carolina an entire negro jury was empanneled. A case was brought before them, the witnesses examined, and the attorneys made their respective arguments. The judge after laying down the law, and recapitulating the testimony, gave the papers into the hand of the foreman, a rather intelligent looking darkey, with instructions, as soon as they found a verdict, to bring it in with full. Twenty minutes or more elapsed, when the jury returned, headed by the foreman, and stood before the judge. As the foreman appeared to hesitate, the judge inquired.

"Mr. Foreman, have you found a verdict?"

"No, massa judge, we hab'n found 'em, no how," replied the juryman.

"It's a very plain case," said the judge.

"Can't help it, massa; couldn't see it," replied he again.

"On what grounds?" enquired the judge.

"We Jon's look on de groun's massa judge," replied the foreman; de ossifer did not take us out into de groun's but he took us into a room and locked in, and told us when we found de verdic he would lead us out; so we began to find de verdic," and search every nock and corner and crevis, and cherrying dat was in' dat room, but we found no verdic—no nothin ob de kind dar.

Industry Lengthens Life.—Dr. Guy, an Englishman, in calculating the average duration of life of the wealthy classes, arrived at the surprising results, with regard to adults, that the higher their position in the social scale, the more unlimited their means, the less also the probability of long life. We have been so long accustomed to consider the possession of riches as the best guarantee of physical welfare, that many will be surprised to hear from Guy that 'the probability of the duration of life elsons, with regard to the adults in each class of the population, in the same degree as the beneficial impulse for occupation is lacking. If a person who for a long time has lived an active life retires from business, it may be taken for granted, with a probability of ten to one, that he has seized the most effective means to shorten his life."

Good for the Teeth.—Dissolve two ounces of borax in three pints of boiling water, and before it is cold add one teaspoonful of spirits of camphor, and bottel for use.—A tablespoonful of this mixture, mixed with an equal quanty of tepid water, and applied daily with a soft brush, preserves and beautifies the teeth, extirpates all tartarous adhesion, arrests decay, induces a healthy action of the gums, and makes them look pearly white.

Ague and fever.—An old member of the "Journal de Medicin de Bruxelles" contains a letter from Dr. Hannon, professor of Botany in the University of Brussells, confirming the views recently promulgated by Dr. Salisbury cryptogamic origin of marsh or intermittent fevers, but stating that the facts mentioned by the distinguished English physician had been long recognized in Belgium. "In 1843," says Dr. Hannon, "I studied at the University of Liege. Professor Charles Marson had created in me such an enthusiasm in the fresh water algae (water weeds) that the windows and mantelpiece of my chamber encumbered with plates filled with them. my preceptor said to me: Take care at the period of their fructification, for the spores of the algae gave intermitent fever. I have had it every time I have studied them too closely.' As I cultivated my algae in pure water, and not in the water of the marsh where I had gathered, I did not attach any importance to this remark. I suffered for my carelessness a month later, at the period of their fructifications. I was taken with shivering; my teeth chattered; I had the lever, which lasted six weeks."

"Why does frost benefit soils?"—Because it expands the clods, and causes them to break and crumble into fine dust, exposing their matter to the air, enriching them by the absorption of gaseous matters.

"Why are clayey soils unfavourable to vegetation?"—Because the soil is too close and adhesive" to allow the free passage of the air or water to the roots of plants; it also obstructs the expansion of the fibers of the roots.

"Why are sandy soils unfavourable to vegetation?"—Because they consist of particles that have "too little adhesion to each other;" do not retain sufficient moisture for the nourishment of the plants, and they allow too much solar heat to pass to the roots.

A Scandal.—A telegram from Halifax, July 19, says: "A man hailing from Toronto as the Rev. W. H. Hefferman, and agent for the sale of pictures of the Rev. Mr Punshon, called the Young Men's Christian Association Rooms last week. He received the private and public attention of the Association and others of that city, but on leaving his boarding-house he took with him a servant girl and has since been living with her as his wife. It is known that they have not been married as represented.

A convention of the mail makers of the United States was held at Niagara Falls yesterday. Thirty-three mills, representing 6,000,000 keys of mails per annum, had delegates present, but the meeting adjourned without action, to meet again on the 16th prox. at Pittsburg, Pa. The object of these conventions is the effecting of the arrangement of a uniform scale of prices.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them: those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and All Know that what it does once it does always—that is never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of the remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore healthy functional action.

For Liver Complaints and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstruction which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change these complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as has this wonderful remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among the ills of the human race, it has been Higher and higher in the estimation, as it has become better known. It mantains character and power to cure the various maladies of the lungs and throat, more wonderful than was at first even hoped or dreamed of. Those who have tried it, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and All Know that what it does once it does always—that is never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore healthy functional action.

For Liver Complaints and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstruction which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change these complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Fever, Lake Fever, Fever and Ague, or Bilious Fever, &c., and in fact all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As it is entirely harmless, it does Cures, and does not disappoint. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, or any mineral with which it is combined it is safe to take in any quantity, and will cure, in a perfect manner, all forms of Fever and Ague, Intermittent, Remittent, and Bilious Fever, though a parallel to the fearful list of Ague complaints, he need be puzzled in the least to know when to use it. Some of the radical cures effected in this locality are truly astonishing, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Thousands and thousands, either in the West, or in the sickly districts of the Southern States, have found in this Ague Cure a perfect antidote for the disease, and by timely taking it have escaped the fearful attacks to which they were exposed. Even when the disease has become seated in the system, and has completely undermined the health, this Ague Cure will prove potent in driving out the disease, and restoring health and vigor to the shattered system. For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an effectual remedy, as many in this locality can testify. Wherever its virtues have been tested, they have worked like a charm, and have established for it the confidence of the community. Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all druggists everywhere.

PRICE, $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

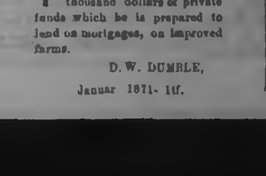
IRON IN THE BLOOD



MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitution & Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere; and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

To Sign or Not to Sign.

(AFTER SHAKESPEARE.)

To sign or not to sign, that is the question;
Whether 'tis nobler in a man to suffer
The slips and sorrows of outrageous drinking,
Or to take arms against such needless troubles
And by the pledge to end them! To sign—
To abstain—no more, and by this means to end
The heart-ache, and the thousand ills
That drink is father of? 'Tis consummation
Most devoutly to be wished. To sign! abstain!
Abstain, perchance to thirst! Aye, there's the rub!
For in that abstinence, what appetite may crave
When we have given up the drink we like,
Must give us pause. 'Tis coward fear
That makes calamity of so long life,
For who would bear the curse of this foul fiend
The fearful wrongs; the poverty and shame;
The sad remorse for broken vows;
The insolence of landlords, and the kicks
That pot-boys the poor drunkard give.
When he himself might his own peace secure
By one good step? Who would headache bear,
Or live a drunkard's poor degraded life,
But that the dread of what the folks may say?
Our comrade's sneer, which we can ne'er endure
From which we cannot fly—puzzel the will,
And makes us rather bear the ills we have
Than fly to others which we fear to meet,
Thus customs vile make cowards of us all;
And thus for want of manly resolution
To bravely meet the scorn and wisely act.
This enterprise of great strength and moment,
We sneak like coward slaves away
And lose the prize we covet.

A Leap for Life.

I was on my way from Paris to Rome, and one morning in May found myself in the City of Marseilles, where I had made up my mind to take the steamer for Italy. The vessel I had intended to sail in, had departed the day previous to my arrival, so there was nothing to do but to select the next best and commence my journey. After noting the offers of the various companies, I finally settled upon the General Abbercei, of the Variety Line, and after seeing my baggage aboard, and looking in vain for some one to whom I might say good-bye, I followed suit, and was soon on the deck.

I looked around me at our passengers; never was there a greater mixture of nations. French, Spanish, and, above all, Italian, were heard on every side, but I listened in vain for a sound of our good old English tongue After numerous leave-takings and kissings, such as only a foreigner can indulge in, we managed to get off, and steamed from the harbor with a light breeze following, and a happy a company as was ever got together. There were several notables on board, the Consul-General of France to Rome, and his wife, an accomplished and elegant woman; several Secretaries of Legation, besides many officers of the French Army, who, with a company of troops, were on their way to relieve a part of the garrison at Civita Vechia, then held by the French. As we sailed along, many small boats followed us, the occupants shouting and waving their good-byes until we were out of sight. Could they have seen what the next twenty-four hours could produce; could they have known their good-byes were indeed farewells to those who, before the morrow's sun, would be in eternity, their gladness would have been changed to sorrow, and their rejoicing to tears.

As I said, we sailed on the morning of the 7th of May, 1869, and nothing occured to mar our voyage up to 8 o'clock that night, when the wind changed, and a head sea set in, which quickly drove all the ladies and most of the men below. As for myself, (having spent nearly a year at sea, and never suffering from that malady called sea-sickness,) I walked the deck for some hours, partly for the fresh air, which I could not get in the saloon, and partly because a feeling of uneasiness and insecurity had taken hold of me, endeavored in vain to throw off. There were good grounds, however, for my feelings, for I had not been half an hour on board before I noticed a lack of discipline among the officers and crew, which boded no good in case of accident, and which was afterwards fully confirmed by their conduct. We were also heavily laden including among our freight a deck-load of petroleum, upon the barrels of which the troops lay or sat smoking. I endevored in vain, by signs, to make the Captain understand the nature of such inflammable material, but he treated the subject with the utmost indifference, and, shrugging his shoulders went into his room, as if the fate of over sixty lives was of no possible consequence.

Having remained on deck up to nearly 11 o'clock, I went to my room and lay down, taking off my coat merely, for the horrid presentment that something would occur still clung to me, and made my sleep anything but quiet. It was about 1 o'clock when I was awakened by a fearful crash, followed instantly by two more shocks repeated in quick succession, while at the same moment shriek and cries burst from all parts of the cabin, where terrified women and children were rushing wildly hither and thither. My first thoughts were that we had struck upon some reef or shoal which this part of the Mediterranean abounds in, but on reaching the deck I soon saw my mistake, for a large brig, whose outlines I could just see in the darkness, was slowly drifting away from us, and I knew in a moment that we had crushed into her, and the only question now was, were we sinking or was she?

Every one was now on deck, and the confusion and excitement were dreadful. Men called aloud for their wives, and mothers for their children, while others on their knees called upon God to save them.

I went to the forward part of the ship and there saw enough to convince me that an hour would soon decide the case for us all, for our bows which were made of iron, (in fact, the ship was iron, and Clyde built,) were all store in, and the water fast pouring in, in great volumes at the apertures.—But another sight I saw, which, for cowardice and unsailorlike conduct, could hardly be equalled. The captain and crew, with only one or two glorious exceptions, had seized the only boat left uninjured, and in the indistinct light I saw them pulling away from the ship, and leaving us to our fate. I rushed back to the stern, where the passengers, who had now caught sight of the boat, were vainly stretching forth their hands and begging for the love of God to take them in The Consul, whom I have mentioned, shouted a reward of two hundred thousand francs, would they but take his wife. In his agony he besought and prayed them, but money in that hour had no temptation, and his words fell on ears deaf to all mercy.

Seeing one of the sailors, who yet bravely stood at the wheel, I asked, by signs, for life-preservers. He shook his head; they had none. I then tried to get two or three men together, who would help me wrench off doors, or cut away seats and benches which ran along the upper deck, for a raft, but they would not stir; either they could not understand or fear had paralyzed them. And now the ship was settled by the bows and rapidly sinking; already the water was nearly amidships and almost up to the fires. The engineer had left his post with the engine at full speed, and it was pushing us here and there, as chance directed. I now began to look around to see how I might save myself. The time had passed when we might have worked together, and every one for himself was the thought of all.

Having taken off my clothing, I seized a small settee; it was almost good for nothing as a float, yet more than one attempt to take it from me, and it was only by threatening them all with my knife that I could keep possession. I knew that it was a chance if it would hold but one, and life was too dear to part with lightly.

As the water reached the boilers, the steam poured out in volumes, and many, thinking we were on fire, added to the scene, by their cries. I had made up my mind to throw my settee overboard, and was about to do so when my attention was drawn to the brig, which was approaching again with the evident intention of affording help. The ship had now sunk so far that her stern was raised thirty feet above the water, and only the mizzen-mast was clear of it. Every moment we could could feel her settling lower, preparing for he final plung to the bottom. We were all huddled together in the steam, anxiously looking for boats, or at least a boat from the brig, when the captain hailed us, asking what nation the ship was. He spoke in French, and we cried back: "The General Abbertuci, Italian; we are sinking; can you save us?" Then a silence ensued, and mothers hushed their children, and we all waited the words—the words of life or death. The answer came back clear and distinct: "We cannot help you, we are sinking ourselves." Oh, the agony of that moment. Yet there was no more frantic crying, but men grasped each other's hands in a farewell grip, and a dark settled despair was on the face of all.

I now determined to reach the brig or perish attempting it, for I saw there was no hope for us, and I reasoned that the brig, being a wooden vessel would hold out the longest, or at least afford a means of building a raft; at any rate it was death to stay where I was, for I knew I should be drawn in by the suction when she sank So grasping my watch, and what money I had with me, which I had taken from my vest, I went up the rigging, and as the brig sank on the swells, I jumped down and screas — The exact distance I sprang I could not say, but I struck her gunwale and fell in the passage way, between it and the after-cabin. I lay for a moment stunned, and then springing up I came amidships. Here everything also was in confusion, our steamer having struck her on the starboard side near the bow, cutting a hole in her to the water, and carrying away a good part of her rigging.

The Captain and sailors, numbering about ten men, were endeavoring to get a small boat, which lay keel upward on her deck, free from the entangled rigging, and launch it. It was only after working with a will that we were enabled to get it over the side, and jumping in as best we could, we pulled away from the brig towards the steamer, but we dare not approach too near for fear of being drawn in, but shouted for them to jump, and we would pick them up.

It was too late. One awful scream, one cry of agony—such as I pray I may never hear again—as she plunged to the bottom; and off all those cabin passengers. I alone was left. The waters met and closed over her as peacefully and calmly as if nothing had occured, and nearly sixty souls, men, women and children, were in eternity.

The day had fairly broken now, and with the new light we seemed to have new hope. Finding that the brig, which was drifted some way off, was still floating, we steered for her, and, clambering up, threw ourselves upon the deck worn out and exhausted. I think, had our vessel then sank that not a man could have saved himself, so utterly were we used up; but help was near at hand. We had discovered, while in the boat, the masts and spare of a ship looming up on the horizon, and now she was in plain sight. We hoisted our flag as being in distress, and shouted, and almost cried with joy, as we saw her return the signal, and then came bearing down towards us. As she passed where the steamer sank, she put out her boats and picked up two passengers, and then came to us. She proved to be The King bound from Norway to the coast of Africa. Her captain, a bluff old sailor, but a kind-hearted man, after a consultation with the captain of our brig, told him he would help him into the nearest port, which was Leghorn, or, as he called it, Lireano. Our vessel, although severely damaged, would still float, for being, as the sailors have it, only in ballast, we were enabled by constant pumping to keep out until we had stuffed the rent full of old cordage, sails, &c., and nailed a large lot of canvas over the side.

The captain of The King had also picked up the captain of the steamer and his crew in the boat they had taken so basely, and, being rather short of provisions, with so many more thrown on his hands, all that could had to stay on the brig.

We found by observation that we were about 100 miles from Leghorn, and turned our prows in that direction; but now, one of these calms so frequent in this sea set in, and it was only after three days and nights' uncreasing labor at the pumps that we reached the port. The ship, meanwhile, kept close by us, and at night our lamps answered each other's welcoms light, while deck-watches of the two vessels sent across the water the joyful cry of "All's well." I was quite used up and unfit for duty after the second day, for my feet were swollen and purple, and my left wrist sprained from my jump, but it was not until cramps set in that I give up taking my turn at the pumps, for there was many a poor fellow worse than I.

The moment we arrived the news spread like fire, and soon a crowd of many hundred were about us asking questions and pressing upon our acceptance food and money, and in fact, like many others of our species, we needed both, for a more sorry looking crowd would be hard to find. Our wardrobe was made up of the odds and ends belonging to the captains of the two vessels, and was anything but comfortable, but we little thought of that, for life had been spared us, while so many had met a watery grave. Of my journey to Rome, and the reception I received there, I will not speak—suffice it to say that a more kindhearted people than the Italians, or one more ready to help those in actual distress, do not live. I made a statement of the affair before an American Consul at Leghorn, and have since learned that the captain of the Abbertoci is serving out a term of eighteen years in the Government Prison for not having his lights out, and cowardice in leaving his vessel.

Nearly two years have now passed since that night, but I can see those pale faces, and hear the shrieks as they sank. It will cling to me while I exist, for I am sure I can never forget while memory lasts—my leap for life.

Great Britain.

Mr. Lowe lately gave the following explanation of the national debt of Great Britain:—At the time of the peace our debt, instead of being £800,000,000, was nearly £900,000,000. Since that time we have added £80,000,000 to the debt, namely—£20,000,000 for the emanipation of the slaves, £30,000,000 for the Crimean war £10,000,000 for the Irish loan, and £19,000,000 for the Aysinian war. I have provided myself with an accurate account of the state of the debt at the present time. The landed debt is £733,000,000, and the unfunded £4,000,000: The terminable annuities, estimated at eleven years purchase, amount to £50,000,000—making altogether about £793,000,000. It follows therefore that since the close of the war, and adding the £80,000,000 I have mentioned, the debt has been reduced from £930,000,000 to £793,000,090; a reduction not very far short of £200,000,000.

The Sea of Galilee.

What the traveller will see when he catches the first glimpse of the limpid sheet of water will be a small ovalshaped lake, thirteen miles long and six broad. It is evidently of volcanic origin, and the earthquakes which have rent the wall of Tiberias, as well as the hot springs at several places in the vicinity of the lake show that volcanic egiencies are still at work. All along the eastern side runs a green plain, which except at one spot (the probable scene of the destruction of the swine after the healing of the Gadarene demoniac) is everywhere about a quarter to half a mile in width. Beyond this rises to the height of about 2,000 feet, an escarpment of desolate-looking hills, scored by various ravines, and having a plateau at the top. As there are neither trees nor villages to be seen on that side, and no signs of cultivation, the view in that direction has a certain monotony, but is atoned for by the air of mystery derived from its very desolation, and from the fact that even in our Lords time it was so unfrequented that He had but to visit it when He required the refreshment of solitude. It was this lovely shore that we are reminded in the lines of the beautiful hymn:—

"Come to a desert place apart,
And rest a little while,'
So spake the Lord when mind and heart
Were faint and sick through toil."

It was somewhere among these featureless hills—probably toward the northeastern corner of the lake—that he fed the 5,000 who had flocked after him on foot, it was somewhere about these grey ravines that He spent the night in prayer. And how many times must his eye have rested with pleasure on the dimpling surface of the inland sea! a sight delightful in any region of the world, doubly refreshful and delicious in this sultry land.

The Answered Prayer.

BY S. FRANCES PAGE.

"O, mamma!" exclaimed little Amy, one day, with quivering lip, while the great tear-drops dimmed her bright brown eyes. and rolled down her rosy, dimpled cheeks. "O, mamma! Papa is so strange lately. When he was going out just now, I asked him if he would get me a little oneriage for my doll like cousin Jessie's; and he said 'No,' and then he said something so bad that I do not wish to say it after him."

"Did he swear?" inquired Ona."

"Yes, and then he struck me; O mamma!" and little Amy hid her face in her mother's lap and cried bitterly.

"When I was coming home from school, yesterday, John Powers and Luther Wayne called me a drunkard's child," said Ona. "Mamma, does papa get drunk, and is that what makes him appear so strange?"

"Yes, my child, it is all caused by rum."

"O, mamma!" sobbed little Amy, what shall we do?"

The wife and mother looked with mute appealing eyes towards heaven, but made no reply.

"O, mamma! what shall we do?" echoed Ona.

"Pray for him," was her reply. "It is all

The accused have not yet arrived in Canada; when they do, the matter will receive further ventilation. no doubt.

The rate for the Village of Ashburnham, for 1871, as now fixed, is 11½ mills on the dollar. The statute labour amounts to over half as much more or nearly 6 mills on the dollar, making an actual rate of not less than 17 mills in the dollar, with an addition yet to be made, it is believed of about one mill in the dollar for a fire engine The entire rate will not fall short of 18 mills in the dollar this year. About 2 mills of these are caused by the change in the School Law, making schools free. And of course 1½ mill are required for enlarging the school building to meet the requirements of the Village.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT RACE:—Telegraphic news yesterday evening informed us that the St. John's crew had beaten the Tyne Crew by over two boat lengths. The same telegram, however, brought the sad intelligence that Renforth of the Tyne Crew, burst a blood vessel near the close of the race, and in consequence is dead. It is thought that owing to foul evidence, an extra effort was put forth—causing the melancholy accident. This will cast a gloom over the whole race, and will prevent that rejoicing of the victors in the International, that might otherwise have been expected.—and this the more because they were defeated at Lachine last year.

Mr. John King, M. A., has received the appointment to the Brantford Grammar School, salary, $1,000.

The riots in Ireland assumed a more important shape than was at first known. The Irish question is not yet solved, and rash acts of those in authority will never bring about a happy issue. It is hard to forgive the blood of relatives and intimate friends, hence those in whose power life is, should be slow to allow it to be taken away.

THE WOODEN RAILWAY:—We observe in Town a Mr. Earle, partner of Heriberts, the contractor of the Guelph Wooden Railway. We suppose Mr Earle is connected with Mr. Carnegie, President of the Haliburton Railway Company, about the construction of that much desired road to the North—Success to them. Mr. Earle is also proprietor of a Patent Wooden Churn, which he claims will make the grease come "quicker than lightning." We understand the introduction of the churn is a scheme of the Railroad Company in view of the rapid development of Dysart as a dairy country. Has the Secretary of the Agricultural Society an interest in the wooden churn? No doubt Mr. Earl finds that both his wooden projects work well together; at any rate we like the pluck of a man who can handle any thing from a Wooden Railway to a wooden churn—but it smacks somewhat of the "wooden nutmeg," if not of the Wooden Railway.

GRAVEL WALKS.—We have long been an advocate for economy in the public expenditure, and we are not disposed to find fault with the Street and Bridge Committee for any honest effort in that direction, but we do find fault with their late experiment of a gravel walk on the greatest thoroughfare in town. If they had gone to a side street where there was little travel and there made a decent walk with good gravel, no one would find fault; but to pick out the street leading to the Union School—travelled by five hundred children four times a day—and on Sunday by a very large church congregation, and then to throw down rough gravel, wholly unfit for the purpose without even taking out the large stones, is a piece of work that does not increase our respect for the judement or discretion of the committee. We have repeatedly suggested that we could not understand why all our road making is so rough. We would rather drive over the natural roads than be jolted over the loose stones, spread on the street by our corporation experts. Gentlemen let us entreat you to make one honest effort to spend the public money properly, and take our word for it you will be surprised to learn how quickly you will receive the good will of the citizens.

BUSH FIRES.—The fires of the last three weeks that surrounded, and threatened with imminent peril, the Village of Minden, had a lull for a few days, but fanned by a brisk wind on the 18th inst. they raged with increased fury, but not to threaten so closely the Village, as before. The wind blew S. W. S., thus favouring that place. Within sight frightful columns of dense smoke ascended from the Anson side of the country, and a very lively running fire a little north in Anson sent forth ashes and smoke, which caused many a watery eye and heart-felt fear. On the Minden side terrific fires also raged, with a wind also favouring the settlement, but it may be feared injuring isolated parties. More south, in Snowdon and Galway, the devouring elements kept up a frightful play. On the new Monck Road it took possession of a hill side, and seized one of the new raised crossways and shut up the road, and by 12 o'clock noon was progressing with fearful rapidity East toward the buildings of the settlers. The roads were bestrewed with fences, and scarcity of water caused great excitement. Ripening grain in one instance was in great danger, the sparks actually crossing the fence into the same field. Travellers had to hunt up a road through the bush as best they could, or be pent up for they know not how long. As far as the eye can reach towering masses of smoke presents a glowing appearance, in dead the horizon Westward is not visible.

RAIN.—Too late to do the crops any service, but as a great relief to the settlers of our north country, showers fell the whole of Sunday, the 20th, and the fires in the bush succumbed, many will be thankful.—Com.

The Circus was largely patronized on Tuesday. The town was crowded with people from the country, who came in to enjoy themselves. The sharpers that attend such places, and generally accompany such exhibitions, were numerous, and appeared to be making money faster than the simpletons who patronized them.—Several of our own Townsmen have gone into the show "Business" too, and were turning the cents fast during the day, and were freely patronized. They were wholly in the "boss" business, however.

One man—and now and then a woman—was giving dimes for dollars as fast as fools could come forward to hand in their money. He practised in this wise. He had hundreds of envelopes, sealed, containing a fancy picture, or perhaps two, worth about one cent or two, and also a 5 or 10 cent piece, now and then a 50 cent piece, and over and above perhaps a dollar, would be shown to be in the envelopes, but this was kept to be shown, as the operator could easily select the dollar envelope. For a chance of obtaining a dollar one the foolish fathers, men and boys, were handing in their "quarters," in return for which an envelope, a fancy picture, and 5 or 10 cents were pocketed, and yet dupes continued to hand in their quarters nearly all day.—Numerous other devices were resorted to gull the silly ones, and with great success too.

The animals exhibited, except the horses, were not numerous, but the procession of chariots and horsemen through the town was good, the best in this place for many years. The horses were fine animals, well kept, and a large number of them. As to the performance we can say nothing.

All experience in regard to these exhibitions tend to prove that the moral status is not elevated by their appearance. The crowd of sharpers, pickpockets and the immoral characters that accompany them pollute not a few and are enough to defile the whole community. A day in town has often a fair opportunity for making several hundreds drunk, all tipsy, and especially a day at the show, as nine tenths of all who go to see the show, go to spend the day to suit their own fancies, and having no business save become rather "devil-may-care" before night. The whole associations of a circus are only evil.

Water Works.

By the last Minutes of the Town Council it will be seen that Water works are again on the tapis, and that the Town Council are prepared to grant a yearly interest of Eight per cent for ten years to any company that will undertake the work and provide water for fire purposes, if the amount of bonus paid or claimed year by does not exceed $2,000. By an approximate estimate submitted $25,000 it is supposed, will be required to carry out some plan. We are not fully able to say what plan—or scheme.

Mr. Kennedy's scheme provided for a main pipe from Dickson's Dam on McDonald street as far as George street, nearly to Sherbrook street, from George to Rubidge street, and thence along Rubidge street to St. Andrew's Church, on Hunter street to the Catholic Church, along Murray to Aimer street, from Dublin to Charlotte street. The pipes some places 10in. some 8in. and down to 4inches.

The proposition of Mr. Stevenson on Monday night, in the Council, referred to some map, but what plan we are unable to say, as there were two maps before the Council, Mr. Kennedy's plan and a tracing by some one else, but which of those is not definitely known.

It is held that $25,000 will be sufficient to complete Water Works for the streets referred to; perhaps water can be provided for a greater distance by means of Hydrants and Hose, and by means of the Steam Engine. If the Council grant eight per cent on the sum of $25,000, there can therefore be no risk in forming a company as the only outlay the company would have to provide for would be the working expenses. And it is believed that private parties would contract for water supply at rates that would enable the company to make fair profits.

The only thing to be feared in forming a company is parties getting into the company that might secure more in the Council than would be to the interests of the people, and "rings" might wring more out of the public coffers than justly due them.

It is much to be regretted that tricksters are already on the committee proposed to get up a "prospective for a Water Works Company

Can the people forget the "Gas" work rumors and do they not now see that the contract is not being kept with the Town. How many lamps are now lighted, and where are they? Should the Water Works be commenced and conducted on the same plan of what practical value would they be? Pipes on McDonald Street, or on Water Street and no more, would secure a very limited supply of water for places west of George Street. The Council should see to it that no bonus be given until the entire Water Works, as agreed, be constructed. If they do not, it may hereafter be found that the Town will be paying $2,000 a year, and getting nothing in return.

Since writing the above we have seen the tracing referred to. The red lines indicate that the Water Works should extend on McDonald St. to West of Catholic Church; on Reid Street from McDonald to Dublin St.; on Aylmer street as far north as Edinburgh Street; on George Street from Sherbrook to Antrim St. Now that we will also have a Steam Fire Engine, and over 500 feet of hose, this would afford a reasonable chance of protection against fire, to all the citizens. If faithfully carried out and constructed by a substantial and responsible company satisfaction might be expected. At any rate the scheme now proposed is less than one half the cost of what was proposed last year. While it promises a water supply for a much larger portion of the Town, that is taking the engine into consideration A saving of $30,000 or 40,000 in this one item has been secured by consistent opposition to jobbing.

Fires and Inquests.

There is every reason to believe that too often fires are caused by interested parties who desire to dispose of their stock in trade or property in a more advantageous way than by the regular course of trade. Often, too, "the enemy" does the foul deed, and now and then fires assuming serious dimensions are the result of carelessness, or of smoking where it should not be done.—Some of these causes could be remedied by using the right means. Not to ensure stock or property too high will prevent burning; to get the insurance money.

An enemy can not so easily be watched, but carelessness could be materially lessened by causing a considerable share of all risks to be run by the owners of property.

Every policy, too, should contain a clause against smoking on or in the property ensured, and by inserting such a clause in all policies relative to fires, a two-fold object would be obtained. Some fires would be prevented, and young men would be less apt to commence the semi-barbarous practice of smoking for amusement.

INQUESTS

Especially in reference to finding the guilty party or parties are too often of no value. They are undertaken without sufficient previous investigation, and they are as often carried on without judgement. Spite has no small share in inducing some parties to get an inquest instituted, in some instances, when in not a few cases apparent respectability or a numerous family or friendly association in a neighbourhood deters from bringing an inquest about, when it is most needed and would most likely implicate some one, The fear of destruction to ones own property often compels silence, when bold, plain speaking would be more to the interest of the public.

The public Journalist occupies an unenviable position in regard to these things, a position that requires the greatest caution lest blame be attached to the innocent, and boldness that where guilt is plain, plainness of speech may point out the guilty.

In the matter of the late fires, there was evidently anxiety manifested to convict a certain party, and this anxiety was shown almost from the occurrence of the fires.—Whether the parties were guilty or not, it was poor policy to appear to run on one individual, while the object should be to get information on the subject without appearing to try to convict any one in particular, as this always leads to caution on the part of those against whom strong surmises are thrown out. The late inquest failed in this particular. The strictures made on inquests, too, are often of such a nature as to show that not the origin of the fire but other little jealousies are at work. Guilty or not guilty, condemnation is meted out. Evidence is considered false or faulty, according as it tallies with certain ideas or not, and witnesses are abused for not telling what perhaps they did not know.

The illustration of simple minded people, who never before were in a witness box; perhaps, is considered and held up as complicity, while the more reckless of truth pass unpunished, because more ready to answer.

It is a well known fact, too, that where a certain man has an end to serve his criticisms will be tinged with that end, and venom will show itself.

THE VALUE OF EVIDENCE

is often wrongly estimated. For instance, one man lives in dread of fire daily and rightly, at such hours as his fears may be aroused, takes a look round his place; but suppose on an evening previous to a fire he had been seen coming out of his office or shop just after examination of the property and all through fear of fire, and through the night fire should take place; must the man be accused of burning his property? The owner of property often dreads the carelessness of his hands, and in consequence, pays very irregular visits to secure himself against the chances of fire. Now is he if last seen at the place at a late hour to be set down as guilty of incendiarism? Surely not. And yet if Galvin had been seen out at a late hour previous to the fire, he would have had a verdict against him, and, in all probability, be indicted for burning his property.

How careful, therefore, a Coroner and jury should be in rendering verdicts—Burning property, like every other species of wrong and immorality that involves others in suffering deserves to be punished, and that severely. But are there not other evils as gigantic in their proportions and as destructive of human safety and weal in their tendencies that are allowed to go without investigation, and that, too, because of position, or influence or wealth or sympathy with the crime.

Why should peculiar parties be singled out and punished, while hundreds of others are passed by unnoticed? It is crime that should be detected, and it is immorality that should be decried, no matter who the guilty parties may be.—Yet how do we find the journalist condemned and held up to scorn, the poor man while the rich blackguard is stroked down and flattered.

Not long since, the guardian (?) of public morality, and shall we say private too, in this Town lauded the act of a drunk man in abusing another because that other was an opponent of the Moralist—or would be Moralist, the act was all right. A few days after, the scale is turned, and it becomes his own case. His unscrupulous conduct induces an application of the knuckles, an act not at all to be condoned in his case, but of course all right when applied to the other. This is the Moralist and the Guardian of public rights.

What a true judge of right and wrong, indeed. The motives of men's hearts too, are impugned while not known, and evidence never given almost set forth with certainty.

How can such conduct ensure any good object? Yet this was too evident during the late inquest.

Town Council.

The Council met on Monday evening.—The Mayor presided. Present, Messrs. Toole, Rutherford, Stevenson, Smith, Lundy, O'Beirne, Doherty, English and Edmison.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read over and confirmed.

A communication was read from John Howden tendering his resignation as Constable, and begging to be relieved. His resignation was accepted.

From Wm. Hohn and Jas. English respectively, asking for the appointment of Engineer for the new Steam Engine. This was referred to the Fire Committee.

Petitions were read from J. T. Honthorn, Esq., and others, asking that the lots stripped by fire, lying east of his lot on Hunter Street, be fenced in.

From George Barlee and others, asking for improvements on Aylmer Street. Both referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

From R. Walton and others, asking for a Gas Lamp on Brock Street and Charlotte Streets, respectively. Both were referred to the committee appointed sometime ago on "Gas."

An account from Mr. D. W. Dumble for $5, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Smith, as Chairman of the Fire Committee, read and submitted a report, which on motion was received and adopted.

Mr. O'Beirne, as Chairman of the Committee on Finance, reported. The report was received and adopted.

The Finance Committee beg leave to report that they have examined the following accounts, and they recommend that the same be paid:

Robert Romaine,	$108 60
Robert White,	8 00
John Turver,	3 00
G. Stothem, & Co.	24 00
T. B. Clementi,	20 00
T. Gibbs,	2 25
Wm. Tully,	50
Lewis Pappa,	7 15
T. Launin,	2 85
Wm. Mercer,	8 25
T. Donnelly,	50

As to the accounts of Wm. Mercer and J. Gibbs, though the articles charged therein were required and were furnished, yet they appear to have been ordered without authority, and your committee suggest that some person be appointed to act in such cases, and that his authority alone be admitted. As to the account of Thos. Collins, for nails, your committee cannot in the meantime recommend payment of it. In reference to the communication of Messrs. John Sherin and John Hall, Chairman and Secretary of a Committee asking for assistance in the building of a Steamboat to run between Lakefield and Julian's Landing. Your Committee regret that they cannot under present circumstances recommend the Council to comply with their request.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I. O'BEIRNE,
Chairman.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Toole,—That, whereas it is desirable to secure the early construction of an efficient system of Water Works for fire purposes, and whereas it is the opinion of this Council that such Water Works would be most economical") constructed and worked by a private Company which receive an annual payment by way of bonus from the Town.

Be it therefore moved that this Council will enter into a contract with such of the ratepayers of the Town of Peterboro as shall organize themselves into a legally formed Water Works Company. The said Company to have a subscribed capital of not less than $15,000; ten per cent of which shall be paid into some of the Chartered Banks having an office in the Town of Peterboro for the construction of such Water Works. Whereby it shall be agreed, that in consideration of such Company constructing Water Works which shall have main pipes and hydrants connected therewith in the streets of the Town to the extent and where shown on the map now before the Council, and signed by the Mayor and Clerk for indentification, and further, that the pipes so laid down shall be composed of not less than 512 yards of ten inch pipes, 1056 yards of eight inch pipes, and 1602 yards of six inch pipe, and the remainder thereof being not less than four inch pipes in diameter, together with hydrants at the intersection of every street, with such water pipes, and supplying and continuing to supply water through said pipes for fire purposes, subject to the same conditions and obligations as the Brantford Water Works' Company do to the Town of Brantford.

That the Town of Peterboro will pay the said Company a bonus of eight per cent per annum half yearly on the actual cost of the said Water Works, provided always that they shall not be called upon to pay any sum exceeding $2,000 per annum, and further that the property of said Company shall be exempt from municipal taxation. The said contract to be for ten years and to be renewable for periods of ten years from time to time. The amount to be paid by the Town to the said Company be left to arbitration.

Provided further, that in the event of such Company not being formed by the Ratepayers within one month, then this offer shall be open for the acceptance of any person or persons whatsoever who may offer to form such Company.—Carried.

Mr. Stevenson also read and submitted the following items of estimates for Water Works:—

ESTIMATES FOR WATER WORKS

"According to Mr. Laidlaw's figures, the pipes required for this plan would cost:—

Pipes in Montreal subject to Harbor dues and Duty would cost, £1701 0s. 6d. Stg. at 11%...	$8,391.71
Duty on do. at 35%	1270.00
Freight, Harbor dues, &c., to Peterboro	1,000.00
12 Hydrants at $65.00:	2,730.00
Laying down 5374 yards at 60cts.	2,524.00
Couplings, Lead, &c., ...	1,000.00
	$17,906 11
Add 10% for contingencies.....	1,790.61
	$19,696.93
The Hydrants, &c., cost $3.37½ per. yard, but had no 10 inch pipes, but a larger proportion of 8 inch pipes than is necessary in Peterboro. Assuming, therefore, that the average cost would be the same in both cases, the cost of Peterboro pipes would be.....	$9,824.75
Mr. Kennedy estimates for the Pipes, Hydrants, &c., required in his plan without the 10 inch main	$17,000.00
Add for contingencies.....	1,700.00
	$18,700.00
Mr. Wilson estimates the cost of 4007 yards pair of pipe with 12 Hydrants; the pipe being nearly all 8 inch and upwards—some of it being 12 inch, at	$16,936.00
Add 10% for contingencies.....	1,893.00
	$20,829.60

From the above figures it will be seen that $19,000 will be a large if not a liberal estimate of the cost of the Pipes Hydrants, &c., required by the plan here admitted.

With regard to the Wheel House, pumps, &c., Mr. Wilson estimated the cost at Blythe Mills, at $5,300. Mr. Kennedy, at Dickson's dam estimates the Wheel House &c., with 10 inch main at $10,300; while the cost at the one at Brantford, including the steam engine, &c., was $7,475. So that we think, $6,000 would be amply sufficient to cover the cost of Wheel House &c. thus making the entire cost of Water Works on this scale, $25,000, and upon which $2,000 would pay 8%.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Rutherford,—That the following members of this Council be a special committee to draft a prospectus for a Water Works' Company, and submit such draft at the next meeting of Council. Also to prepare the necessary By-laws, viz:—The Mayor, and Messrs. Smith, Lundy, O'Beirne, Toole, and the Mayor and Mr. Carnegie. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Smith, seconded by Mr. English,—That the Street Inspector be instructed to lay down a sidewalk on the west side of Bethune Street from McDonald to Murray Street, and on Stewart St., from Simcoe Street to connect at Mr. Leonard's dwelling. Carried Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Doherty,—That the Commissioners of the Town Trust be instructed to pay to the credit of the Town Treasurer the sum of $2,000 now, and $2,000 more as soon all received, from the lands south of Town to pay for the new Engine, hose, and hose cart.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Stevenson,—That the application for appointment to the office of Engineer for the Steam Fire Engine be referred to the fire committee with power to dispose of the same as they may deem expedient, and to receive and dispose of any further applications for same office.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Toole, seconded by Mr. Rutherford,—That the Mayor, and Messrs Smith, O'Beirne, Stevenson and the Mover be a special committee to act in connection with the County Council and the Council of Ashburnham or either of them, in reference to the construction of a permanent bridge across the Otonabee River, on Hunter Street.—Carried

The Council adjourned for two weeks.

CROPS IN NEWFOUNDLAND are said to be much better this year than last. Of the fisheries, the cod-seine, cod-net, and bultow fishing have been very successful; and though hook-and-line operations have been unfavorable, the catch on the whole will be a good average one. From Labrador the news is hopeful, and good results are expected in that quarter. Our Newfoundland neighbors seem to be having a decided run of luck.

Vanderbilt, the President of the Staten Island Ferry Boat Company, is in jail, arrested for negligence in keeping an engineer on Westfield, the boiler of which lately exploded, causing the loss of several lives.

Ashburnham.

The Council met in special session on Thursday evening. All the members present.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR:—

In view of the activity at present existing in the promotion of Railway enterprises, and our position as a Town likely to be benefited or injured by the various schemes; is it not well to discuss fully what scheme, of those proposed, or likely to be made available, will best tend to our advantage. In order to do this intelligently, it appears to me as full information as possible should be obtained before we committ ourselves to any scheme. We now are at the mercy of one railroad, which hitherto has answered a good purpose, but the recent change in the management of it ought to cause us to carefully consider its future. The interests of Peterboro in its capital is comparatively small—and the voice which we have in its board of Direction is so limited that we cannot now expect that the representatives of this Town, or its board, will be able to exercise much weight, particularly as their influence only extends to the branch from here to Millbrook. Under these circumstances, I think we have good reason to fear that the interests of Peterboro will scarcely occupy a second place, and that, in fact, Peterboro will be merely an outstation—not to be considered in the general running arrangements—or only so far considered as to give us such accomodation as will not interfere with the regular traffic. It is now a fact that we are made to appear as and out of the way place that travellers have to leave the main line to reach From the position our Town really occupies as compared with Port Hope or Lindsay, this feeling should not exist. And it should be our object to obtain some Railway accomodation in a measure equal to our commercial importance as a Town. How is this to be done? Are we to remain still and take things as they come, or are we to make an effort that will place us in our true position and give us all the Rail Road facilities we require and should command.

It appears to me some effort should be made; our people are fully alive, I believe, to the necessity of some action, and it only requires that by discussing fairly the schemes before them, and those that might be made available, that a true solution of the difficulty can be obtained. Such discussion should, I conceive, be carried on irrespective of the rival claims or interests of either Port Hope or Cobourg. By tying ourselves to either we have no guarantee that the object we have in view will be secured. If any scheme can be perfected that will place us in a through highway, and enable our people both in Town, and the country generally, to get their products to the best markets, and their goods by the most direct routes from desirable markets. Such a scheme should be the one that any aid we could render should receive. With this view I cannot help thinking that the plan predicted in a recent number of the Globe and referred to by the Norwood Register, is the one that will best answer what I believe to be the true advantage of Peterboro.

A road is now being constructed from Quebec by way of Montreal to Ottawa, thence by way of the Canada Central route to Renfrew. Now, if it can be continued westward by the Canada Central so far as it can be made available in a south-westerly direction through the vast unopened country in the rear of the counties of Lanark, Frontenac, Addington and Hastings, to the eastern boundry of Peterboro, through or near Norwood, Peterborough, Omemee and Lindsay to Toronto, it would place us on a front which we much require. A road on such a line would be entitled to Government support; from the fact that it would bring into the market large quantities of wild lands now unavailable. It would be of immense advantage to our friends in the eastern portion of this county—and it would place Peterboro in a position that her manufacturing capabilities might be developed.

The thirty miles of railway transport to and from either Port Hope or Cobourg, has always retarded any manufacturing enterprises here, and so long as we are dependent roads in those towns, we will be no better. That such a scheme would receive the support necessary to make it successful, we have the guarantee from the large and powerful interests that would be directly benefitted. Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal have direct interests involved. The Government of Ontario would have good reason to aid the road both by grants of land and money; and all the counties through which the road must pass could hardly fail to see the benefit likely to result from the development of their most backward portions, and so would be directly interested in aiding and forwarding it. There may be, and doubtless are, many difficulties in the way of this, as of every other large enterprise, still I cannot conceive one that ought to be sufficient to prevent our Town and County making an effort to secure the advantages which I think would result from such a road. With it and other roads running to the rear of our County as spoken of, Peterborough would become a centre—instead of being as it now is, out of the regular course of trade. Roads to the back country would be more likely to be built then because we would have the aid of such a road to assist in constructing them, as they would act as feeders to it.

The importance of the subject, Mr. Editor, and my desire to have the subject fully discussed, will be, I hope, a sufficient excuse for the length of this communication.

Respectivey Yours,

H.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—

Permit me through the columns of your widely circulated journal to defend myself once more but now from the scornful, insolent man, Doctor Kincaid. He stops into the ring and strives to deny his conversation with me on the afternoon of the 11th instant, with reference to that extraordinary and uncalled for editorial of Mr. Carnegie's.

You see, Mr. Editor, there is a kind of an alliance formed against me. There is a Combination existing—it is now the Editor, Carnegie, Romaine, Proprietor, and Medico, Kincaid. But my hard blows on the Editor were struck with such force and dexterity that he was fatally wounded, consequently he is among the dead men of our town. I am informed by persons worthy of credit that Mr. Romaine has repented and says he had never read the proof sheet, and that he was sorry it ever appeared in print. So my next opponent in the field is the little magnificent Doctor. He makes himself so conspicuous in our town that he considers his fame and name should be immortalized for generations to come. That he has either principle or honour is doubtful, as is shown by his denying the truth of his conversation with me in reference to Mr. Carnegie's editorial.

Mr. Editor, I relate as truth what I have already stated in last week's Examiner.

I met the Coroner down town and asked him if he had seen the Review, he said yes, and that he was really astonished at Mr. Carnegie to put before the public such a falsehood, and that he was ready to contradict his statement, and besides that he would let me have a copy of the evidence.

As this conniving little Doctor strives to deny the truth, I will tell a little more of his conversation with me on that day concerning the matter:

He told me that he went and saw Mr. Romaine, and told him it was too hard altogether. Besides this, he told me, tomorrow, (meaning Saturday,) would be a very hurried day, not to go for a copy of the evidences until the fore part of the week, and then he would have all ready, as he was in the habit of doing all his writing on Sunday. I did as directed by this creature. At his own request I went to his dwelling the fore part of the next week, and behold you, there was no evidences to be got according to promise; but said he, you can get them from Mr. Weller, Clerk of the Peace, as I have handed them to that gentleman. I went to Mr. Weller's office, and found I could not have a copy of the O'Shea's evidence, (as styled by Mr. Carnegie,) without paying the handsome sum of $4.50. As I had not the money about me the evidences did not appear.

This, Mr. Editor, is a true and candid statement of my conversation with the Doctor. I, for one, say that any man holding the dignified position of his profession should feel ashamed before the public for such a feeble effort as he has made to evade the truth in this case. Besides, any man keeping his books on Sunday as he has told me he does, is not an honor to his profession. Sabbath-breaking never ends well. But I shall say no more of his standing or christianity. Excuse me, Mr. Editor, for again trespassing on your valuable space. I only desire to put the matter fairly before the people, and to let an intelligent and impartial public judge between the statements.

Yours truly,

JOHN O'SHEA.

The Corean Battles.

New York, Aug. 22.—Full details of the second battle between Admiral Rodgers fleet and the Koreans, have been received. It seems that 609 Americans defeated 6,000 of the barbarians. The last Anglo-Chinese newspaper contains a rumor that the Colorado and another American man-of-war had run aground, were captured by the Coreans, and all on board massacred with the exception of Ministers Low, who was retained as a hostage. There is no confirmation of this alarming intelligence from official sources.

A special correspondent writes that, just as the mail is closing, intelligence is brought of further Corean outrages, which will doubtless cause England and Prussia to take steps for the protection of their subjects. Not long since the Prussian schooner Chausan was wrecked on the coast of Corea, and abondoned, the crew being warned by the Corean officers that nothing must be taken from the wreck. The crew put to sea, and succeeded in reaching Che Foo, where the wreck was sold by auction to two British subjects. Accompanied by Prussians purchasers they sailed for the scene of the wreck in order to recover as much as possible of the cargo. On arrival they were surrounded and siezed by officers of the Corean Government, who, it is reported, put them in bamboo cages and started for the interior of the country, where, beyond doubt, it is the intention to execute them. Upon the reception of this news, H. B. M. corvette King Dove left at once, having on board Mayers, acting British Consul, and a Russian officer. The very latest ibtelligence is that the North German war ship Hertha has also left for Corea to give the matter attention.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

During the year ending Feb. 1st, 1870, Mr. Fellows paid nearly eleven thousand dollars for advertising in the Dominion alone. He is doubtless the most extensive advertiser in the British Province.

Many persons suffer with a sick headache and nervis headache, usualy induced by costiveness, indigestion, &c. Such persons will find relief if not cure, by keeping the bowels open with small doses of parsons' purgative Pills.

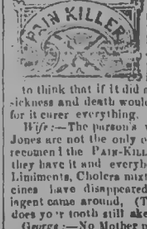
Found at last! A remedy that not only relieves, but cures that enemy of mankind, consumpsion, as well as the numerous satellites which revolve around it in the shape of Coughs Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, &c. The remedy we allude to is Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, prepared by Seth w. Fowle ll Son, Boston.

INTERESTING TO VOLUNTEERS.—An important artical in the outfit of a soldier is a good medicine in a convenient form, and the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" is just the artical. It cures wounds, bruises, and frot-bites, and it is the best medicine that can be used diarrhoea, and summer complaints generally, and it is a sure cure for rheucatism, and that class of complaints brought on by exposure or fatigue.—Price 25 cts, per bottle, to be had at all medicine dealers.

☞ Is health worth having? If it is protect it—it is a jewel as easily lost as virtue, and in many cases as difficult to recover. In this climate, and more particularly at this season of the year, people are very apt to take cold and suffer from sore throat, coughs, spitting of blood and pulmonary complaints generally which if not checked immediately lead to serious consiquence. The question arises—which is the quickest and most effectual remedy? Hagyard's Pulmonic Wafers have been before the public for twenty year have always given perfect satisfaction, and invariably effect permanent cures when taken in season.—Sold by all medicine dealers and country stores, at 25cts per box.

Hide Bound Horses.

A horse is said to be hide-bound when his skin will not slip under the pressure of the hand, but sticks as if it was glued, which condition is always dependent on a deranged state of the stomach and digestive organs—by correcting which and giving to them a healthy tone and condition, the disease or complaint will disappear. Experience has proved that the means best adapted to this end is "Darley Condition Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy." It has been used in numerous cases with complete success, generally effecting a cure in a few days. It is the best condition medition known, and may be given with perfect safty at all times, and does not require that the horse be kept from work. Remember the name and see the signature of Purd & Co., is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., Prietors for Canada. Sold by Medicine Dealers.



Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the PAIN-KILLER. The Parson's wife and Mrs Judge Jones are very, positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did al it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fasion, for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recomend the PAIN-KILLER, every where I go they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' agent came around, (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear!

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The PAIN-KILLER does not profess to cure everything either in the Dir-about the bottle or the "Annual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence. Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whose testimony cannot be doubted.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are Bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods,

Wife:—Judge Jones was as incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Son and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificate recived from parties within five miles of his own home.

Choice Poetry.

The Crownless.

BY A. W. LISTON.

O souls that bravely do and dare!
O hearts that to the Truth are loyal!
A crown of glory ye shall wear,
For ye, and only ye, are royal!
The crowned form that sit in state,
And sway their sceptre's o'er the nations,
Are least of all the earth-born great
Who claim our praise and obligations,

He most deserves a crown who stands,
When others mock at his endeavour.
Upholding Right with heart and hands,
Nor yielding in his efforts ever!
He is the truest king of all
Who, at his conscience's behest moving,
Stands proudly up to win or fall,
The righteousness of manhood's proving?

The kingly ones who years agone
Fought through a night of Error's bringing
And fell in armour ere the dawn
Deserve a minstrel's proudest singing!
Sublimest faith they ever knew,
Sublimest work that faith inspiring—
And theirs a lesson good and true
Forever is to our desiring!

They wear few crowns who win them here;
They wear the most who never win them;
But while they glittering appear
There is no goodly glory in them!
They only catch the gaze of men,
Their glories vanish as one gazes;
The crownless win their crowning when
They rest at last beneath the daisies.

O souls that bravely do and dare!
Mankind at length shall own you royal!
The crown of glory you shall wear,
If only you are ever loyal!
For service true hath its reward;
There waits a coronation morning,
When faithful angels of the Lord
Shall robe you with a king's adorning!

The Thief's Expedient.

There is a fable among the Hindoos that a thief having been detected and condemned to die, happily hit upon an expedient for his jailer, and told him he had a secret of great importance which he desired to impart to the king, and when that had been done he would be prepared to die. Upon receiving this piece of intelligence the king at once ordered the culprit to be conducted to his presence, demanding of him to know the secret. The thief replied that he knew the secret of causing trees to grow which would bear fruit of pure gold. The experiment might be easily tried, and His Majesty would not lose the opportunity; so accompanied by his Prime Minister, his courtiers and his chief priest, he went with the thief to a spot selected, near the city wall where the latter performed a series of solemn incantations. This done, the condemned man produced a piece of gold and declared that if it should be planted it would produce a tree every branch of which would bear gold.

"But," he added, "this must be put into the ground by a hand that has never been stained by a dishonest act. My hand is not clean, therefore I pass it to your Majesty."

The King took the piece of gold, but hesitated. Finally he said

"I remember in my younger days, that I often filched money from my father's treasury which was not mine. I have repented of this sin, but yet I hardly dare say my hand is clean, I must pass it, therefore, to my Prime Minister."

The latter, after a brief consideration, answered.

"It were a pity to break the charm through the possible blunder. I receive taxes from the people, and as I am exposed to many temptations, how can I be sure that I have remained perfectly honest? I must give it to the Governor of our Citadel."

"No, no," cried the Governor drawing back, "Remember that I have the serving out of pay and provisions to the soldiers. Let the high priest plant it."

And the priest said:

"You forget, I have the collecting of tithes, and the disbursements of sacrifice."

At length the thief exclaimed:

"Your Majesty, I think it were better for society that all five of us should be hanged, since it appears that not an honest man can be found among us."

In spite of the lamentable exposure, the King laughed; and so pleased was he with the thief's cunning expedient, that he granted him a pardon.

A patient complained to his physician that he was pursued by a ghost the night before as he was coming home from the tavern "What shape was it?" asked the doctor. "In the shape of a jackass," said the man. "Go home," replied the physician, "and keep sober. You were drunk last night, and frightened at your own shadow.

The sentiment of saving drunkards is poetry, and makes a fellow feel good, but rum is rum still, and it locks too much like pumping water back into the tub you draw it out of, to license rum mills and then make it the highest virtue to interfere with its working. "Snatch" every rum seller and "jug" him till the lawyers eat him out of home.

Two gentlemen named Sullivan daily perambulate a New York saloon streets with a tin pail, into which they turn the drainings from beer kegs left upon the pavement, and have a jolly drink, winding up in a friendly ash-barrel. A prohibitory law would be an abrogation of their personal rights.

Many a man who rises from poverty and obscurity to wealth and honor, can trace his rise to his civility. Civility will always reproduce itself in others, and the man who is always polite will be sure to get at least as much as he gives. No man," says Lord Bacon, "will be dexterious in respect toward others, who knows the value of respect to himself."

A Portland paper tells how a servant girl there mends her stockings. "When a hole appeared at the toe, Bridget tied a string around the stocking below the aperture and cut off the projecting portion. This operation was repeated as often as necessary, each time pulling the stocking down a little, until at last it was nearly all cut away; when Bridget sewed on new legs, and thus kept her stockings always in repair.

PLAIN TALK TO GIRLS.—Your every-day toilet is part of your character. A girl who looks like a "fury" or "sloven" in the morning, is not to be trusted, however finely she may look in the evening. No matter how humble your room may be, their are eight things it should contain, namely: A mirror, wash-stand- soap, towel, combe, hair, nail and tooth-brushes. These things are just as essential as your breakfast, before which you should make a good use of them. Parents who fail to provide their children with such appliances, not only make a great mistake, but commitit a sin of omission. Look tidy in the morning, and after the dinner work is over, improve your toilet. Make it a rule of your daily life to "dress up" for the afternoon. Your dress may or need not be anything better than calico, but with a ribbon or flower, or some bit of ornament, you can have an air of self-respect and satisfaction that invariably comes of being well dressed.

A girl with fine sensibilities cannot help feeling embarrassed and awkward in a ragged and dirty dress, with her hair unkept, should a stranger or neighbor come in. Moreover, your self-respect demands the decent appareling of your body. You should make it a point to look as well as you can, even if you know no one will see you but yourself.—Husband.

They have so much money in England just now that they do not know what to do with it. Herepath's Journal of July says: "There is an absolute glut of money."—Nothing could afford a stronger proof of such a condition than the huge amount of private deposits of the bank of England—nearly £28,000,000. How any large portion of the money can be absorbed is a problem. There is no adequate commercial demand, and though new companies have been brought out, the aggregate capital asked for is unimportant in comparison with the supplies

New Way of Making Butter.—The Ravenna(Ohio)'Democrat' put on record the following new style of making butter: "A few days since Mrs Mary M Hughes put a alout a quart of cream in a cloth bag and buried it about two feet deep in the earth, where it remained three days,when she disinterred it and found it transfered into pure white butter with not one drop of buttermilk to be seen. Mrs Hughes thinks that cream will yield about one-third more butter by this process than by the old fashioned way of churning.

It is stated that a few days ago a most extraordinary exhibition of the force of gunpowder was made in Massachusetts.—The Cape Ann Granite Company, with a burst of seven kegs of powder, started a block of granite in their quarry at Bay View one hundred and twenty-two feet in height, forty-two feet wide, and thirty feet deep, containing about one hundred thousand cubic feet, and weighing over fourteen thousand tons—supposed to be the largest block ever quarried in this or any other country.

LOVE UNDER DIFFICULTIES.—A young lady writes from a western town to the Chief of Police in Hamilton as follows:—"In Hamilton there is a man named Billy Thompson; who is in love with me, and who was driven away from our house last week by my old father, who drives away every one who comes to court me. Now if you see him just tell him that I love him and will stick to him tighter than wax—father or no father. I intended to be in the city in a few days, and I'll thank you for your kindness. Give Bill the enclosed picture, and tell him not to fret. We will be happy yet." The Chief is puzzeled what to do in the matter.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination under which they were painfully afflicting, have been made available in every great pulmonary ailment in every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt guest of the organism undermines the constitution and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a single fear of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, however, it may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it may betray its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in many, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other corruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Pile, Epilepsy, Neuralgia and the various forms or affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effects. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Dependent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the peculiar symptomatic of Weakness, will find in a wonderful relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Which Shall it be?

[A rich man, who had no children, proposed to his poor neighbor, who had seven, to take one of them; and promised, if the parents would consent, that he would give them property enough to make themselves and their other six children comfortable for life.]

Which shall it be? Which shall it be?
I looked at John—John looked at me,
And when I found that I must speak,
My voice seemed strangely low and weak,
"Tell me again what Robert said;"
And then I list'ning bent my head,
"This is his letter:—

"I will give
A house and land while you shall live.
If, in return from out your seven,
One child to me for aye is given."
I look'd at John's old garments worn;
I thought of all that he had borne
Of poverty, and work, and care,
Which I, though willing, could not share;
I thought of seven young months to feed,
Of seven little children's need,
And then of this.

"Come, John," said I,
"We'll choose among them as they lie
Asleep." So walking hand in hand,
Dear John and I surveyed our band;
First to the cradle lightly stepped,
Where Lillan, the baby, slept.
Softly the father stopped to lay
His rough hand down in a loving way,
When dream or whisper made her stir,
And huskily he said, 'Not her!'

We stopped beside the trundle bed,
And one long ray of lamplight shed
Athwart the boyish faces there,
In sleep so beautiful and fair,
I saw on James's rough red cheek
A tear undried. Ere John could speak,
"He's but a baby, too," said I,
And kissed him as we hurried by;
Pale, patient, Bobbie's angel face
Still in his sleep bore suffering's trace,
"No, for a thousand crowns, not him,"
He whispered, while our eyes were dim.

Poor Dick! Bad Dick! our wayward son—
Turbulent, restless, idol one—
Could he be spared? Nay, he who gave
Bade us befriend him to the grave:
Only a mother's heart could be Patient enough for such as he;
"And so," said John, "I would not dare
To take him from her bedside prayer."

Then stole we softly up above,
And knelt by by Mary, child of love.
Perhaps for her 'twould better be,"
I said to John. Quite silently
He lifted up a curl that lay
Across her cheek in wilful way,
And shook his head, "Nay, love, not thee."
The while my heart beat audibly.

Only one more, our eldest lad,
Trustly and truthful, good and glad,
So like his father. "No, John, no;
I cannot, will not, let him go."
And so we wrote in courteous way,
We could not give one child away;
And afterwards toil lighter seemed,
Thinking of that of which we dreamed.
Happy in truth that not one face
Was missed from its accustomed place,
Thankful to work for all the seven,
Trusting the rest to One in heaven.

The Family—Home Scenes.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"I'll not live in this way!" exclaimed Mrs. Lyon, passionately, "Such disorders, wrangling and irregularity rob me of peace and make the house a bedlam, instead of quiet home. Tom!" she spoke sharply to a bright little fellow, who was pounding away with a wooden hammer on a chair and making a most intolerable din, "stop that noise this instant! And you, Em, not a word from you lips. If you can't live in peace with your sister, I'll separate you, D'ye hear? Hush! this instant."

"Then make Jule give me my pin-cushion. She's got it in her pocket."

"It's no such thing; I have not," retorted Jule.

"You have, I say.

"I tell you I haven't."

"Will you hush!" The face of Mrs. Lyon was fiery red, and she stamped upon the floor as she spoke.

"I want my pin-cushion. Make Jule give me my pin-cushion."

Irritated beyond control, Mr. Lyon caught Julia by the arm, and thrusting her hand into her pocket, drew out a thimble, a piece of lace and a pen-knife.

"I told you it wasn't there, couldn't you believe me!"

This impertinence was more than the mother could endure, and acting upon an indignant impulse, she boxed the ears of Julia soundly, conscious at the same time, that Emily was chiefly to blame for all this trouble, by a wrong accusation of her sister, she turned upon her, also, administering an equal punishment. Frightened by this, the younger children, whose incessant noise, for the last hour, had contributed to the overthrow of their mothers temper, became suddenly quiet, and skulked away into corners,—and the baby that was seated on the floor, between two pillows, curved her quivering lips, and glanced tearfully up to the distorted face in which she had been used to see the love-light that made her heaven.

A deep quiet followed this burst of passion like the hush that succeeds the storm. Alas, for the evil traces that was left behind! Alas, for the repulsive image of that mother, daguerreotyped in an instant on the memory of her children, and never to be effaced. How many, many times, in after years, will not a sigh heave their bosoms, as that painful reflection looks out on them from amid the drearer remembrance of childhood.

A woman with good impulse, but with scarcely any self-control, was Mrs. Lyon. She loved her children, and desired their good. That they showed so little forbearance, one with another, manifested so little fraternal affection, grieved her deeply. "My whole life is made unhappy by it!" she would often say. "What is to be done? It is dreadful to think of a family growing up in discord and in disunion. Sister at variance with sister, and brother lifting his hand against brother."

As was usual after an ebullition of passion, Mrs. Lyon, deeply depressed in spirits as well as discouraged, retired from her family to grieve and weep. Lifting the freightened baby from the floor, she drew its head tenderly against he bosom, and leaving the nursery sought the quiet of her own room. There, repentance and humiliation, she recalled the stormy scene through which he had just passed, and blamed herself for yielding blindly to passion instead of meeting the trouble among her children with a quiet discrimination.

A weeping calmness succeeded, still, she was perplexed in mind, as well as grieved at her own want of self-control. What was to be done with her children? How were they to be governed aright? Painfully did she feel over her own unfitness for the task. By this time the baby was asleep, and the mother felt something of that tranquil peace that every true mother knows when a young baby is slumbering on her bosom. A book lay on a shelf near where she was sitting, and Mrs. Lyon, scarcely conscious of the act, reached out her hand for the volume. She opened it without feeling any interest in its contents, but she had only read a few sentences when this remark arrested her attention.

"All right government of children begins with self-government."

The words seemed written for her, and the truth expressed was elevated instantly into perception. She saw it in the clearest light, and closed the book and bowed her head in acknowledgement of her own errors. Thus for some time she had been sitting, when the murmur of voices from below grew more and more distinct, and she was soon aroused to the painful fact, that as usual, when left alone, the children were wrangling among themselves Narious noises as if pounding, and throwing about chairs, and other pieces of furniture, were heard, and length a loud scream, mingled with angry vociferations, smote unpon her ears.

Indignation swelled instantly in the heart of Mrs. Lyon, and hurridly placing the sleeping babe in its crib, she started for the scene of disaster, moved by an impulse to punish severely the young rebels against her authority, and was half way down the stairs, when her feet were checked by a remembrance of the sentiment: "All right government of children begins with self-Government."

"Will anger subdue anger? When storm meets storm, is the tempest stilled?" These were questions asked of herself, almost involuntarily.

"This is no spirit in which to meet my children. It never has, never will enforce order and obedience," she added, 'as she stood upon the stairs, struggling with herself, and striving for the victory.—From the nursery came louder sounds of disorder. How weak the mother felt! Yet in this very weakness was strength.

"I must not stand idly here," she said, as a sharper cry of anguish smote her ear, and so she moved on quickly, and opening the nursery door, stood revealed to her children. Julia had just raised her hand to strike Emily, who stood confronting her with a fiery face. Both were a little startled at their mother's sudden appearance, and both expected the storm which usually came at such times, began to assume the defiant, stubborn air with which her intemperate reproofs were always met.

A few minutes did Mrs. Lyon stand looking at her children—grief, not anger, upon her pale countenance. How still all became. What a look of wonder came into the children's faces, as they glanced at one another. Something of shame was next visible. And now the mother conscious of a new power over the young rebels of the household.

"Emily," said she, speaking mildly, and yet with a touch of sorrow in her voice she could not subdue, "I wish you would go up into my room, and sit with Mary while she sleeps."

Without a sigh of opposition, or even of reluctance, Emily went quietly from the nursery, in obedience to her mother's desires.

"This room is very much in disorder, Julia.

Many times Mrs. Lyon said, under like circumstances, "Why don't you put things to right?" or, "I never saw such girls! If all in the room was topsy turvy, and the floor an inch thick with dirt, you'd never turn over a hand to put things in order," or, "Go and get the broom, this minute and sweep up the room. You are the laziest girl ever lived." Many, many times, as we have said, had such language been addressed by Mrs. Lyon, under like circumstances, to Julia and her sister, without procuring anything like even partial execution of her wishes. But now the mild imitation that the room was in disorder, produced all the effects desired.

Julia went quickly about the work of restoring things to the right places, and in a few minutes order was apparent where confusion reigned before. Little Tommy, whose love of hammering was incessant annoyance to his mother, ceased his din on her sudden appearance, and for a few moments stood in expectation of a boxed ear; for a time he stood puzzled to understand the new aspect of affairs. Finding that he was not under the ban, as usual, he commenced slapping a stick over the top of an old table, making a most ear-piercing noise. Instantly Julia said in a low voice to him.

"Don't Tommy, don't do that. You now how it makes mother's head ache."

"Does it make your head ache, mother?" asked the child, curiously, and with a pitying tone in his voice, as he came creeping up to his mother's side, and looking at her as if in doubt whether he would be repulsed or not.

"Sometimes it does, my son," replied Mrs. Lyon, kindly, "and it is always unpleasant. Won't you try to play without making so much noise?"

"Yes, mother, I'll try," answered the little fellow, cheerfully. "But I'll forget sometimes."

He looked earnestly at his mother, as if something more was in his thoughts.

"Well, dear, what else?" said she encouragingly.

"When I forget, you'll tell me, won't you?"

"Yes, love."

"And then I'll stop. But don't scold me, mother, for then I can't stop."

The mother's heart was touched. She cought her breath, and bent her face down, to conceal its expression, until it rested on the silken hair of her child.

"Be a good boy, Tommy, and mother will never scold you any more," she murmured gently in his ear.

His arms stole upwards, and as they were twined closely about her neck, he pressed his lips tightly against her cheek, thus sealing his part of the contract with a kiss.

How sweet to the mother's taste were those first fruit of self-control. In order to govern herself, what a power had she acquired. In stilling the tempest of passion in her own bosom, she had poured the oil of peace over the storm-fretted hearts of her children.

Only the first fruits were there. In all her after days did that mother strive with herself, ere she entered into a contest with the inherited evils of her children, and just so far she was able to overcome evil in them. Often, very often, did she fall back into old states, and often very often, the self-resistance only a slight effort, but the feeble influence for good that flowed from her words or actions whenever this was so, warned her of her error, and prompted a more vigorous self-control. Need it be said, that she had an abundant reward?

Daddy's Boy.

In a certain small town on the Mississippi lived a man who made horse-training a business. He bought horses for a city market, and was considered pretty good on a trade.

One day a long, lean, queer, green looking specimen of the Western country arrived with a boat load of horses. He inquired for the horse jockey.

"Daddy sent me down with some horses to sell," he said, in a sort of half-idiotic tone.

"Who's he?"

"Daddy."

"What do you want for your horses?" said the jockey

"Daddy said you could set yer price?" was the response.

"Let me go down to the boat and look at your horses," said Brown, and they were soon at the boat.

Brown examined the horses, and named the prices he would give for this and that, and the country pumpkin made no objection, although some of the offers were not more than one half the real price of the animal. One of the by-standers gently suggested that he was being cheated, but he returned:—

"Daddy said Brown could name the price himself," and so Brown had it all his own way.

At last they came to another animal which did not look much superior to any of the rest.

"I must have more for that anermal," said the fellow. "Daddy says he can run some."

"Run!" said Brown, "that nag can't run worth a cent."

"Daddy said so, and I guess Daddy knows"

"Why, I've got one up to the stable that could beat him all hollow," said Brown.

"Guess not," said the fellow. "Let's try 'em. I'll bet the whole load of hosses on 'im."

Brown smiled.

"I'll stake five thousand dollars against your boat load of horses," said Brown, winking at the crowd, "and these men," selecting two, shall hold the stakes."

Brown's five thousand was handed to one, and the other went on board the horse-boat.

One of the crowd started to remonstrate with the poor idiotic fellow, but he only responded:

"Golly! dad told me he could run some and daddy ought to loose 'im if he was sich a fool as to tell me that, when he couldn't."

Brown's sleek racer was brought out, and Brown mounted him. The countryman led out his animal and mounted on his back, looking as uncouth and awkward as the animal he proposed to rule.

The word was given and they started amidst the laughter of the crowd. At the commencement Brown was ahead, and it looked as though the poor fellow was to be badly beaten, when suddenly, his horse plunged forward, and the horse jockey was left far behind. Such going had never been seen in those parts before, and poor brown was crestfallen as the cheers of the by-standers fell on his ears."

"I'll take the spondulix," said the countryman, riding up, "dad was right. The anermal can get 'round a little."

Brown tried to say that it was all a joke, but the fellow would have his money.

"I guess I won't trade to-day," said he, as he put it in his old, rough, leather pocket book. "I'll go back to daddy."

Brown was completely "sold," for he knew at once that the countryman was a little shrewder than people imagined him and had just come there purposely to win his money from him.

Next time he did not ridicule a horse that "daddy said could run some."

A Chinese Death Bed.

The Chinese have many customs peculiar to their nation, which strike the "outside barbarian" as unnatural and strange.—Their religious traditions are so deep-rooted and so strongly fostered by superstition as to give little encouragement to missionary laborers. The most striking of those superstitions are those pertaining to the disposition of their dying and dead relatives. Very often the dead bodies of Chinese men and women are found in untenanted buildings in the Chinese quarter of the city, and those unacquainted with their superstitions are prone to set the desertions of dying friends down as acts of selfishness. This, however, is not so, as the Chinese believe that if persons die in the house thet they have lived in before death, their spirits will haunt the place ever after, and give unpleasant evidence of their presence to all who remain. In order to prevent the manifestations of the restless spirit, as soon as the doctor gives it as his opinion that the patient cannot survive he is taken to another place and left alone to die.—Yesterday a case of this kind was reported to the coroner. A young Chinawoman, who had been given up by her attending physician, was carried by her relatives to an untenanted house on Ellis Place, off Pacific, above Dupont. They then dressed her in the best clothing, spread a new matting on the floor and laid her on it.—They brought in preserves, meats, fruits, candies, boiled rice, etc., lighted some punks and retired, leaving her alone to await the common destroyer. During the day she died, and was found last night.—Coroner Letterman removed the body, and it is now at the morgue awaiting further action of the relatives, who will probably leave her to be disposed of by the city, as is generally the practice in all such cases. Many Chinamen—those of the wealthy classes—do not desert their dead friends, and for the furtherance of this desire there are several hospitals fitted up, in order that those about to die may be removed there until they have paid the debt of nature, after which they are buried with all the ceremonies of the disciples of Confucius.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Strawberries For Next Year.

Some one writing with as much authority as if he had just risen from the perusal of Greeley's "What I know," says:—In order to secure a satisfactory crop of strawberries next year, it is necessary to begin preparations now. Layers, rooted in pots, may be planted even in hot days of July or August; the plant will grow right on, and become sufficiently large to give a good crop next spring. Plants rooted in pots are not generally for sale by nurserymen, but there will be no difficulty in getting them done to order. Small pots; those known in the trade as verbena pots, are filled with good compost and sunk in the soil of the bed. The runner is placed upon the soil of the pot, and a clod of earth or small stone is placed upon it to keep the wind from disturbing it until it is rooted. The plant should be set in freshly stirred soil, and if the operation is properly managed it will show no signs of having been disturbed.

Unconscious Influence.

Two kinds of influence are exerted by man. That which is direct and voluntary, by which he endeavors to sway others by argument or persuasion, and that which is unconsciously flowing out from him. The importance of the former is everywhere acknowledged, but the latter is seldom appreciated. It falls on the world unobserved. History is silent on its effects; public laws make no accounts of its mischiefs or its benefits: the discipline of families, societies, and schools passes it by unnoticed, and no human power can trace it with sufficient accuracy to make its authors responsible, because it is thus overlooked, it is therefore insignificant. Nothing is more silent than the soft and genial light flowing spontaneously in all directions and filling the world unconsciously with its beams. It would scarcely wake an infant, yet is perpetually recreating the world and rescuing it from darkness. Its absence would destroy life, and render the globe itself a dreary, useless ball. So light than a tone and feeble instrument because so noiseless and so gentle; and are the angry earthquake and the noisy thunder superior forces in the natural world? The greatest powers are those which lie behind the connections of nature, and the outward efforts that we make to sway others secure but a fractional of the good or evil that is done in the world.

Words we may control at will; but looks, tones, motion and conduct, all of which spring from the internal character, compress a great quantity of influence, which is ever affecting mankind. The child begins his life experience by simple imitation. He looks and listens, and soon reproduces the appearance, or the gentleness, the passion or the tranquility, that he witnesses in those wround him. He delights to copy all that he sees and hears, and in every moment receiving impressions which through it cannot be removed. As he grows older the desire for approbation and respect for others takes the place of imitation. Fashion, so powerful as often to become a tyrant, owes all her strength to this unconscious influence. Enthusiasm of any kind kindles and catches from one to another, till sometimes the whole nation blazes in its heat. Fear and superstition, party spirit and speculation, will often spread through a circle or a community by the magnetism of unconscious influence, without any direct effort to produce them. The same is true of all the active feelings and impulses of mankind. Even when the direct influence of man seems to be greatest, it is due in a large degree to the insensible influence which accompanies it.—The heart, filled with its subject, gives expression to the features, tone to the voice and light to the eye—all involuntarily, but powerfully aiding the language and directing efforts. It is thus that hypocrisy so often fails to produce the effect that might be expected. Words may be used where the heart is absent, but the effect of earnestness cannot be counterfeit. Every one, how humble, is thus daily and hourly altering and moulding the character of all with whom he mingles, and exerting a power that will reproduce itself through countless generations. The truest method of doing good is this first of all to be good; then the character will necessarily communicate good to others. An influence will always accompany true and right principles, while no effort without them can be successful. The sun could never make the planets shine, were it not itself luminous. A full surrender of the heart to duty and to God will make us partakers of his nature, and we shall as naturally communicate good to others as we receive it from Him.

Weight Measurement.

Full-fatted measuring as follows will weigh as stated in the table:—

GIRTH. Feet.	Inches.	LENGTH. Feet.	Inches.	WEIGHT. In pound
5	0	5		264
5	0	6		336
5	6	3		397
5	6	4	0	480
6	0	4	6	540
6	0	5	0	603
6	5	4	9	672
7	9	5	6	902
7	0	6	0	985

The following are rules for similar work:

For cattle girthing from five to seven feet, allow twenty-three pounds to the superficial foot.

Cattle from seven to nine feet girth, allow thirty one pouns.

For small cattle and calves from three to five feet girth, allow sixteen pounds for each superficial foot.

For pigs, sheep and cattle of less than three feet girth, allow eleven pounds to the foot.

The general rule is as follows:

Suppose, for example, you had a steer the girth of which was six feet four inches, and length five feet three inches. You want to compute the weight of beef you can get out of him. You have:

Girth, 76 inches, multiplied by 63 inches; the length equal 4,783, divided by 144, equal 33¼ square and superficial feet, multiplied by 23, equal 764¼ pounds.

This rule will work with as much accuracy as any other, and a little practice with it will enable you to work it rapidly and quite skillfully if you have an eye to stock.

HOW TO MEASURE BINS

To find the contents of bins, boxes, tubs and cisterns in grain bushels, ash bushels and barrels, sufficiently accurate for general: Find the contents in cubic feet, then multiply by four-fifths and you have the grain bushels; multiply again by four-fifths and you have the ash bushel; divide the contents in cubic feet by 5 and you have the barrels in dry measure of 32 gallons.

A bin which holds one thousand bushels by this rule holds one thousand and four by exact measurement.

A tub or round cistren holds very nearly four-fifths as much as if it

WARSAW SHOW.—A correspondent from Dummer complains that there have been only three bills of the East Riding Fall Show sent to Warsaw. Perhaps this can be remedied yet.

The President of the Dummer & Douro Agricultural Society also complains that but three bills have been sent to Dummer or Douro. Will some one see after this and oblige the Dummer and Douro Agriculturists, who take an interest in Shows.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.—Parties intending to exhibit will bear in mind that all entries must be made before twelve o'clock noon, of exhibition day, [12th Sep.] if they wish to compete for prizes. Let every one who has anything worthy of exhibition bring it to the Show.

Only fifteen candidates out of fifty-three were successful at the recent Teachers' Examination in the County of Bruce. All unlimited certificates given by the former board will be cancelled on and after Jan'y 2nd, 1873.

At the examination of Teachers in the County of Grey there were six applicants for second class, and of these but two were successful—two others obtaining third class certificates. For third class there were 45 applicants, but two of whom were successful.

Guelph Council has imposed a rate of 11½ cents in the dollar for the present year, raising the sum by $23,571,17; apportioned as follows:—County rate, 3 mills in the dollar; public schools, 4 mills; redemption of debentures and interest, and for general purposes, 8 mills in the dollar; making a total assessment of 1½ cents in the dollar.

The Indians who met the Manitoba Government to form a treaty in reference to their lands were so well fed that they hesitated to accept the terms offered, viz:—$12.50 yearly per family, for ever, and a grant of 100 acres of land to each family of five persons. When it was found that rations would be withdrawn, and no better offer made, they accepted.

Hetherington, a clerk in the Toronto City Chamberlain's office has been committed to stand his trial for forgery. He forged a receipt as if from the bank for $725, and used the money altho' eventually paying it back along with other sums taken in the same way.

STEAMER FOR STONEY LAKE;—To-day the "Colonel Strickland" will be launched at Lakefield. She is being built by Mr. F. Beamish of Port Hope, for the waters north of Lakefield. A boat for Stoney Lake at last, but they had to go to Port Hope to get a man to build one. We hope Mr. Beamish will succeed in his enterprise.

A very exciting time was caused in Ogdensburg, by the lecturing of Baron de Camin, an anti-Catholic lecturer. A large number of special policemen were sworn in, and the volunteers were called out, and after considerable trouble escorted the lecturer safely to his boarding house. A special meeting of the Common Council was held at which it was resolved that the right of free speech should be maintained at any cost.

Toronto has had some irregularities in the accounts of the City Chamberlain. It appears that the clerks, at least, two of them, so managed to cook things as to be able to take several hundred dollars at a time, without being detected for some years. Two of the clerks are waiting trial, when, perhaps, the method of procedure will be fully explained. Canadians are apt pupils, and any lesson uncle Sam can afford is readily received and applied.

A remarkable and mysterious case of murder has come to light in New York.—The body of a young and beautiful woman was found packed in a trunk not over two feet long by 18 inches. The trunk had been brought to the Hudson River Railroad depot by a woman who got it checked for Chicago; but the trunk bursting in the depot revealed its contents. Jacob Rosenweig, a doctor, is in custody on suspicion of having taken the life of the unfortunate girl while forcing an abortion. The woman who took the trunk to the depot was an accomplice.

An Agricultural Society has been formed at Winnipeg.

Very few of the Magistrates in Manitoba can read the Statutes. Schools have never been established in the settlement, are not yet, but sections have been formed.—The Magistrates merely arbitrate between parties, and not seldom make each pay half the costs.

Mr. Clarke, the Attorney-General of Manitoba was hissed on his return to that province and conducted to the hotel amidst yells, hisses and uproarious noises. He pulled out his revolver, it is said, and threatened to shoot some of the party, and challenged one of them to meet him at ten paces. Law is law in Manitoba.

The management of the Grand Trunk Railway is in great need of some change. Scarcely a week passes without reports of "smash-ups" and loss of life. There can be no doubt but the government of John A. McDonald is accountable for all, or nearly all the lives lost on the road. If the managers were forced to pay more attention to their road, and less to politics, there would be more time to see after employers, who from want of oversight become careless and reckless.

We publish in another column the reasons given for Mr. Bond's going over to the R. C. Church. To him, no doubt, they appear sufficiently convincing, and he has a right to become a member of any church he pleases. The revilings of former friends are unwise. Mr. Bond was dismissed from being head master of the Trenton Grammar School lately, not for following his conscientious convictions, we believe, but for forcing history to teach his pupils his newly assumed faith. Mr. Bond was long noted for his Ritualistic opinions which he holds, the Rubric teaches.

RENFORTH:—The inquest on the body of Renforth, after occupying three days, has been adjourned to the 4th of September. The public are already, however, pretty well satisfied as to the cause of his death. The Doctors, we are told, have expressed an opinion that he died of congestion of the lungs; and though the fact that the stomach and heart have been sent to Boston for analysis looks as if more light was thought necessary, this step may have been taken simply to dispel even the shadow of suspicion of foul play, which the declaration of Renforth that "he had taken something," might have raised in some minds.

VERITAS.—That once eminent personage has come to life, not far from the scenes of former childhood, Norwood. Poor Veritas! he is right, "Nuffsed," by him especially If he will call at our office we will permit him a post mortem of those letters, and, also, an examination af a few concerning himself, that we have kept back from others. If he could see some of them they would rob him of his vanity. That Veritas may find the truth is our earnest wish. As hitherto it has not been a companion of his. "Nuffsed" doctor! Boa-constrictor enough, indeed, doctor. Latet anguis in herba; there's a snake in the grass, the slough thereof is visible

MURDER AT WATFORD, ONTARIO.—An old man named Horton, 60 years of age, shot another man named Joseph Robertson, at Watford, on Friday last. Robertson was 26 years of age, and was but lately married. About a year ago Horton got Robertson to make a velocipede, to enable him to travel round the country, as he is lame. The model being Horton's own, Horton called several times on Robertson about it. At last some young men for fun told Horton that Robertson was making a fortune out of the affair. On hearing this he proceeded to Robertson's shop and demanded $50, to which Robertson replied he owed him nothing. Horton replied, 'you vagabond you have robbed me of my patent', and pulling out a revolver shot him; the ball lodged in his bowels, and caused death. Horton, although an old man, evinces no sorrow for the foul deed.

A SECRET WORTH KNOWING.—Peters' Musical Monthly for September is a splendid number. It would seem almost impossible to improve this excellent work, and yet each succeeding number seems to be better than the last. The present number opens with a beautiful Ballad by G. W. Persley, entitled "Barney Aleen;" then follows a charming Song by Tucker, "My Mother's Wedding Ring;" after which comes Thomas's Sacred Song, "The Cross and Crown," which is alone worth double the price of the Monthly. "My Sister in Heaven," Song and Chorus, and "The Home of the Swallows," Duet, are also gems of great value. These are followed by five Quartets, three easy Piano pieces, and two elegant Transcriptions by Leonie Tonel, making a total of fifteen pieces, printed from thirty-six full-size music-plates, and you can get all this choice music for thirty cents. Vol. VIII, commenced with the July number, and the publisher offers to send the July, August, and September numbers for 75 cents—Address J. L. PETERS, 599 Broadway, New York.

The Fire Engine has arrived, and remains at the Station. It is considered worth $3,500 in the Custom house, and hence it may be supposed that the difference between the cost price and $4,250, what he Town is to pay, will equal the duty—viz: $750. But we find that Fire Engines, (Steam) imported for Municipal Corporations were free in 1870, but at most are only 15 per cent, or on the above sum $525. The balance, $225 may be called extra profit or freight.

The Telegraph states that the company sold an Engine to Collingwood for one thousand less money, and gave 500 feet of hose more than has been agreed to give to Peterboro. In the Toronto City Council there were almost direct charges of members of that august body having received bribes from the Silsby Company's Agent, so as to secure the sale of their Engine—How far this may be true we cannot determine, but it does seem strange that so much difference could be made in the price—perhaps the Engine is different, as he Silsby Company manufacture three classes of Engines. We understand that Mr. Edwards has been instructed to write and find out the whole matter. The Committee, however, have the matter largely in their own hands as no money has yet been paid, and we trust the whole affair shall be cleared up before any money is paid—The Mayor and Mr. Stevenson were at Toronto, on Tuesday, and learned that a larger Engine had been sold in that City for $3,500 greenbacks, but there was no hose nor hose carts. In a day or two the whole thing will be cleared up, and he public informed of the result.

The Combination organs are beginning to manifest their nervousness on the approach of the time for the meeting of the Parliament of Ontario. They are anxious that their masters may stand favorably before the people. The letter of Fryer in the Globe has revealed rottenness in the Crown Lands Department, and worse than all there is no disposition to put a stop to such pilfering of public funds. Mr. Devine of the Department, remarked that it was known that surveyors had to use devices to make a little out of either the Government or out of those employed to assist him. As was before remarked, it is very difficult to arrive at the true expenditure to laborers on public works, but if this difficulty is increased by the corrupt practice of admitting false returns, and then of encouraging parties to make these false returns, what state of things may we expect in a few years. It is well known that human nature is weak in money matters, and hence the necessity for governmental watchfulness least the funds be squandered dishonestly. Under the present regime at Toronto, we may expect things to get worse instead of improving. John Sandfield's liberality depends on quid pro quo in the shape of political support he receives.—Taking this as his rule of action the more corruption used to secure support for the Patent Combination, the deeper any one may expect to get his into the money-bags. During the late contest here we were often reminded that if the electors did not support the Combination candidates, they might expect no favors, and we are sorry to say that the reasoning was too cogent for many of the electors. They were too short-sighted to see that if they had to support bad men to secure their own rights—bad, unjust men must be at the head of affairs indeed. Is it not evident also, that if a just government controled the affairs of Ontario, the just claim of every county in Ontario would be fairly met and granted. But the argument "vote for the Government candidate or you will get nothing," only shows that John Sandfield's government distributes its favors regardless of justice—regardless of the wants of the country, and regardless of any advantage to Ontario as a whole. The question is, what has Strathroy done for me? or what has Belleville done? in our turn what has Peterboro done for John Sandfield?

The electors must see that to support men who openly avow such principles, is nothing more or less than being a party to their principles, with all their corruption and all the consequences on the future of the country.

Last year the West Riding Agricultural Society by forwarding a return of doubtful veracity obtain $300 to $400 more than was their due; and all wondered how the Secretary and Treasurer ever swore to the report. But vile as the defence was, and the act viler indeed, it was defended by some of the people of this County, and held as no dishonesty to cheat the Government. Now if the people support corruption what may we expect from their representatives? When the people render votes of thanks and remuneration for such acts, may we not expect that corruption will stalk abroad at noon-day as at present. At the Agricultural Society's meeting referred to, only Mr. John Walton and Mr. Sanderson, and two more whose names we forget, had the courage to call the act of cheating the Government by its right name. The country has been so long in the hands of unscrupulous men that the whole public institutions of the country are more or less affected, so that nothing short of eternal vigilance can secure the people against the very evils they themselves encourage by voting for bad men, for gain, or reward, or the hope of either.

The same game will be attempted in the coming contest. John Sandfield's money bags will be held up, and dangled round the county, with threats of nothing for Peterborough unless you vote the Government candidate. We trust, however, that the electors will see that such conduct is nothing more or less than an attempt to bribe the people, and that they will mete out to the party who has practised, and may practise it again—the condemnation it deserves by rejecting their candidates at the polls.

OSHEAPHOBIA:—A new disease known as Osheaphobia, has made its appearance in Peterboro. It is of a very malignant type, but, fortunately, hitherto has only attacked Coroners and Editors. It was first noticed after the late fires on Hunter Street, and is believed to have had its origin from the gases generated during the sitting of the inquest in a close room, where the temperament of some men had risen to 212° Fahrenheit. The first case brought to the notice of the Doctors happened thus:—Mr. John O'Shea, boot and shoe maker, of this Town, was lately trying to place a better understanding in the Editor of the Review, but the hide being so hard for O'Shea's awl, it glanced, and striking the Coroner, produced a severe wound in in his pinion. Undue excitement, cephalalgy and palpitation was the consequence, and a complication of splenitis and hepatitis was soon added to the former complications. Extreme tension of the heart-strings, accompanied by an undue effervescence of bile, and flatulency were also added, and shattered nerves and despondency began to intimate the severity of this new disease, as well as its danger if not soon checked. Some blue pills and anopiate were administered; expectoration followed; liver secretion that had been irregular began to be manifest; the breathing which had been very short, accompanied with a hectic cough, became more natural and regular: dilation of the heart was also becoming more general. When the accessory consequent on a severe case of Hepatemphraxis gradually abated, Mr. O'Shea is of the opinion that a soothing powder—morning and evening—a gentle tonic of a little common sense and prudence, and proper watchfulness on the part of the medical profession may prevent a recurrence of this painful malady. O'Shea, himself, was much excited for fear of fatal consequences; and the Editor of the Review fretted and called names, but levite-like, passed by on the other side—a Jew can have no dealings with the Samaritans.

THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.—In the Queen's speech which was delivered at the prorogation of the British Parliment on Monday, occurs the following paragraph: "I will apprise the Parliament of Canada that the provisions which require its consent are to my view highly conductive to the interests of the Dominion. On these provisions, however, that Parliament will pass independent and final judgment."

School Matters.

We stated some time ago that the Government Grant, this year, to the Grammar or High school is $2,560. As soon as the Chief Superintendent shall acknowledge the school as a Collegiate Institute, we shall get an additional grant of $750 a year, making in all $3,310.

The average attendance of pupils at the Grammar School for the past year was 129. A rate of twenty five cents on these would be $300 a year. The High School would, therefore, have an income of $3610 a year.

The salaries are:—

Principals	$1 200
Mr. Clarke	700
Mr. Taylor	550
Mr. R. C. Dixon	400
Miss Hatton	440
Miss Borrowman	320
Total for High School	$3 610

So that really the High School would be self-supporting.

The balance of salaries (Common Schools) would be:—

Mr. Braden	$400
Miss Dowling	300
Mrs. Flavelle	320
Miss Stratton	280
Miss Leete	400
Miss Boucher's	240
	$1,940
Wood yearly about	300
Janitor	200
Other Salaries	120
Total	$2,560

Against this the Board will have:—Government grant about $400; leaving to be provided by taxation for current expenses $2,180, or so.

To meet incidental expenses, too, there may be 20 cents a child in the common school department, which from 400 pupils would realize $800 in the year, and making large allowance for repairs, prizes, glass and stationery, out of this sum, there would be $600 to apply to salaries, &c. And hence the amount to be levied on the property need not exceed $1,800, except to meet old debentures or interest thereon.

Thus for the education of 500 to 600 children only $1,800, or thereabouts, will be required. A less sum, we believe, than in any town or school section in the Province, almost. With these figures before the Board, we cannot think that they will attempt increasing the monthly fee in the High school. Some members of the Board tell us that the $1.00 a month is only to be taken from outsiders, whose parents do not contribute to the expenses of the school. This is not generally understood, however, as all the children have received warning that next month the rate will be increased. A little consideration will convince the Board that the course proposed will injure rather than benefit the school; and we trust that they will give it that consideration it demands.

An increased rate on the pupils in the Grammar School department will stir up another cry that will have to be satisfied, but which will assuredly take away more from the funds at the disposal of the Board than the increased rate will amount to, and hence the folly of meddling with that which is as well now as they can make it. The interest of education, of the Grammar School, and of the people, will be best served by letting well enough alone. A free education is the tendency of the times, and we do trust that Peterboro' will be the last town in America to throw any obstacle in the way of any child receiving the best education the town can afford at the lowest rate possible.

THE FENIAN RAID CLAIMS:—The London Standard refers, in commenting upon the late debate in the House of Commons, to the exclusion from the deliberations of the Conference of the claims of Canada for reparation for damages sustained by the Fenian raids. We can imagine what bitter taunts and insults would have been hurled at Great Britain, if she had confessed her inability to entrain the "Alabama" claims on the ground that a general election was approaching, and that concessions of the kind demanded would cause a Ministerial crisis. The Standard says:—

"The exclusion from the Treaty of the claims of Canada for reparation on account of the Fenian raids was condemned or regretted by every single speaker, including the Prime Minister himself. But we need not waste words upon it now. We are told that the Americans desire us to treat them as a grown-up nation, and not as spoilt children. If so, they cannot but regret conduct of their Government upon this point. For, in the first place, it puts them flagrantly in the wrong before the whole civilized world; in the next, it is a point which England certainly would not have have conceeded to any other Power, and which no other Power would have asked; and finally, the grounds on which this claim was excluded from the arbitration are of a kind of which no true and honest American can reflect with satisfaction. General Grant refused to do us the very same common and simple justice that we were at the same moment doing to America, because the Irish immigrants were so powerful that no American party dared offend them. If Americans can endure to plead such an excuse we need not hesitate to accept it."

The health of the Pope is very precarious. On the evening of the 2nd of July, he was seized with illness, followed by a fainting fit; and on the 10th he was insensible for more than an hour. These fainting fits have become very frequent and the couriers are becoming greatly alarmed. The unfilial conduct of some of his spiritual children, doubtless, greatly aggravates his illness. Public rumor accuses two of his cardinals—Amat and De Silvestri—with having congratulated the King on his arrival at Rome. For the same offence Professor Alibrandi has been driven into resigning his chair at the University, and a great pressure is being put upon the Canon Andisio to follow his example. Cardinal Patrizi, the Pontifical Vicar, has issued a circular against the Liberal journals of Rome putting the whole twelve in the "Index." For their part the whole press, Liberals or otherwise, unite in condemning the late Pontifical brief, marking the following passage for special condemnation: "There are two portions of Italy still under foreign rule, and it is to be hoped they will remain so." The allusion is to Corsica and the Tyrol. The people rightly ascribe the unpatriotic sentiments to Jesuit influence, and 10,000 Catholics have united in an address to the Chamber of Deputies demanding the expulsion of the Order from Rome.—Independent.

MURDER NEAR TRENTON:—On Tuesday evening of last week a murder was committed at Hartsville, near Trenton. It appears that for some time back a fend has existed between some of the river drivers employed by Gilmour & Co., and those employed by Rathburn & Son. At Hartsville a Frenchman somewhat intoxicated advanced toward a man named Mickel, belonging to Trenton, in a threatening manner; Mickel afraid of a bloody affray, lifted a large handspike and struck the French man a fearful blow, which crushed in the back part of his head, and he sunk lifeless at his feet. Mickel was almost immediately apprehended, and the Coroner's jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against him. The crime having been committed within the jurisdiction of this county he was brought up here and lodged in the jail to await his trial.—Cobourg Sentinel.

On Saturday last whilst a man named William Bradshaw, was working at the edging saw in Campbell & Huston's mill at Harwood, a sliver was accidently thrown upon the saw from which it was cast off with much force, passing through the side of the poor man's neck. Drs. Clark and Wade were immediately telegraphed for, and were soon on the ground. A part of the sliver was skilfully removed, but it was a very critical case, and it was found impossible to remove the remaining pieces of wood without danger of immediate death. The unfortunate man lingered in this condition until death put an end to his sufferings on Monday morning, mortification it is supposed having set in.—Sentinel.

The abolition of tests in the universities in England is to be followed by a similar reform in Dublin University Mr Fawcett has introduced a bill into Parliament to that effect, but the Roman Catholics of Ireland do not appear to be satisfied with this. Instead of the concession of equal privileges in Trinity College, the Catholics demand a grant of $200,000 and a charter for a Catholic University. This, however, is precisely what the English will not grant. The inch that belongs to the Catholics has been tardily surrendered; but this is not sufficient reason for giving them the ell which is not theirs.

THE MEANEST THIEF ON RECORD:—The Durham Chronicle speaks his piece at follows: "The cheapest and meanest plan to get a newspaper, that has come under our observation, is to induce some worthless neighbor to subscribe for one, and then call regularly at the post office or office of publication, and ask for his—your neighbor's—paper. That's the way the thing's been done in several instances in this vicinity." We would be loth to believe that any one in our neighborhood had sunk to such a depth of degradation.

A gentleman from the Village of Ferrus says that six children, who were berry-picking in the township of Peel, in the county of Waterloo, were burned to death in a swamp on Thursday last. The little had no means of escape, and their cries were heart-rending. While bush fires are raging with great violence in several parts of the country, it would appear that Peel is not exempt from a visitation of the fire-king.

Two Torontonians condemned to the Penitentiary at Kingston, made a desperate attempt to escape just as they were entering the precints of their future residence on the 14th of August, and before they had been handed over to their new caretakers. One was re-captured, but the other still rejoices in his liberty, though he must find it a burden.

Lieutenant-General Archibald, Com. Simpson and others, met the Anx Indians at Lower Fort Garry, but the Chippewas would not present themselves because the meeting was not in their country. The meeting adjourned to the 27th inst., when, if the dignity of the Chippewas cannot be appeased, the treaty will be made without them.

The Registrar-General of England states the the population of the United Kingdom is increasing at the rate of 1,173 a day.—But emigration takes away 468 of the number, leaving 705 a day to swell the population at home.

Montreal claims a population of 130,000 and spends $40,000 a year on education. Toronto with about 63,000 spends $72,000. Good for Toronto.

Governor Archibald talks of resigning. This news is almost too good to be true.—L'evesque says the reason is no society and testable cookery. Nothing to see nothing to eat. This is rather an uncomfortable state of affairs.

The Messrs. Allan of Montreal own in ocean steamers over 54,000 tons register, and 25,000 tons register of sailing vessels, making a total of over 80,000 tons ocean shipping, exclusive of river and towing steamers.

ON DIT—That politicians in the Parliament building, Toronto, are anxiously awaiting the election trials, which come on at the end of this month. They frankly admit that their carrying the house depends on their success in defeating the Grit candidate at the trials.

Hon. M. B. Almon, Nova Scotia, among other legacies has bequeathed $1,600 to the Diocesan Church Society. He is stated to have left $600,000 to be equally divided among his children.

And now it appears that the engineer of the Westfield was asleep at the time of the explosion, in a chair seventy-five feet from the engine-room, with his feet cocked up on the top of a barrel! How capricious are the forces of nature to kill so many innocent people, when that lazy scoundrel was within reach.

Railway communication will soon be established between St. John, N. B, and Bangor, Me., the construction of only nine miles of the line between those places being now required. The maritime provinces will thus be placed in connection with the railway system of our neighbors and the Grand Trunk Railway.

An appalling railway accident occurred at Revere station, seven miles from Boston, at the Hudson River, on Saturday evening. The lightning express having overtaken and run into an accommodation train full of passengers Twenty-five passengers were instantly killed and forty or fifty wounded—many fatally.—The particulars of the sad accident will be found in another column.

THOSE CITY ACCOUNTS.—We give it up why the detailed accounts of the Comptroller's receipts and disbursements on behalf of the city or country for two years and a half, which began with January, 1869, and closed with June, 1871, are not to be published. In other words the Ring confesses judgment. It dare not face its own records before the public.—N. Y. Tribune.

At Mobile, on the 28th, the low pressure steamer "Ocean Wave" exploded her boiler at half-past five o'clock on Sunday afternoon, at the wharf at Point Clear.—There were about two hundred excursionists on board, fifty to sixty of whom were killed and wounded. A portion of the bodies were brought to the city by the steamer "Fountain" and "Annie." The cause of the disaster has not been ascertained, and an investigation will be made. Out of seven persons comprising one creole family six were killed. The captain, engineers and pilot were killed; only three of the officers escaped.

BURGLARY.—The Custom House and Registy Office at Port Hope were broken into by burglars, on Friday evening last, 26th inst., but they only found a bad five dollar bill and some small change. The Chief Constable was sent in search of them, and having a watch on two Englishmen lately from London, who, he was informed, had come here with the intention of robbing the Express Office, at once put himself on their track, and came across them near the G. T. Station. The bad five dollar bill was found on one of them, which was evidence enough to send them to jail, where they now await further investigation.

CONSUMPTION OF SMOKE.—An invention for securing the consumption of smoke, now in use by Messrs Robert Mitchell & Co., Orig street is so ridiculously simple that it is no wonder it is effectual. It is called Pierce's Patent, and consists of a tube, through which is led a steam pipe of small diameter, both being carried into the furnace. The tube is fixed immediately above the furnace door, and when the fire is fed, steam is turned on, directed on the fire by two nozles, into which the pipe is divided. The gushing of the steam through the pipe and the natural draught carry in atmospheric air, which mixes with the steam before it plays on the fire. In an almost incredibly short time the smoke will disappear, being entirely consumed inside of the furnace. The invention should be seen by those interested, as it seems to have pretty fairly solved the problem of smoke consumption.—Montreal Herald.

☞ We see by the report of the Agricultural Insurance Company of this city that they now have about $ 60,000 as-ets, making a semi-annual divided to the stockholders of 18 per on the capital. The continued success of the company for the past eight or ten years is we think, not often paralled in the history of insurance companies. The company is an honer to our city, and a proof of the sagacity and wisdom of the citizens who have had the management of it. We learn they have the past year extended their business into adjoining State, and especially into Canada, our former place of residence, and are doing a very successful and large business. We con congratulate whilom neighbours and farmer friends that there is no sounder or better managed company in the country, and no more gentlemany and honerable men to deal with than the managers of this institution. We hope none of them will burn out, but if they do, for their sake we hope they will hold an Agricultural Insurance policy.—"Watertown Reformon.

BOLD ROBBERY.—A bold and successful robbery was committed at Ingersoll on the 11th. The victim is a Buffalo cattle drover, whose name we did not learn, and the extent of his loss is the neat sum of $2,800 in bank bills. The robbery was committed on the station platform while the crowd who had been attending the G. W. R. picnic were waiting for the accommodation train. The universal bustle favored the perpetration of the robbery. Taking advantage of the confusion the thief cut open the breast pocket of the drover's coat and abstracted his pocket book, which contained bills to the amount above stated. He is of opinion that the robbery was committed by two men who followed him from Buffalo, and who saw the value of the contents of his pocket-book on the race track in that city a few days ago, while making and receiving bets. Let betters take warning.

We have received what purports to be a map of the Canal system of the Dominion. The Leader, an out and out supporter of the Government, condemns it as faulty, with intent, rather than by mistake. It says:—

"A map has been published, under the authority of the Canal Commission, pretending to show the various existing and proposed water routes of the Dominion. We must say we are not a little surprised to find that the line of the Huron and Ontario Ship Canal has

We noticed the fact to Rev'd Wm. Bond, of the Church of England, "going over" to the Roman Catholic Church. The reasons of his change, which he has made public may interest our readers. He says—

1st. I have not yet been baptized in the Holy Roman Catholic Church. Up to this time I have only made a declaration of my adhesion to and firm belief in the doctrine of that church.

2nd. I have not contemplated this step for years, no not for one month. My position was that of an inquirer, of one who might be led into the church of Rome, or be repelled further from her. Long ago I had made a vow to embrace the truth where-ever she would lead me, whether into Catholicity or Protestantism. And for more than fifteen years I have had a love for truth, and not for one party more than another. Had I for years deliberately contemplated going into the Holy Roman Church, I would have been a hypocrite. When I did contemplate this church and the full nature of her claims burst upon my astonished soul I at once decided to enter her fold.

3rd. When I officiated in Belleville, it was during an unpleasant vacancy that had occurred in one of the churches there in which the people would have been deprived of the worship of God on Sunday, had I not assisted them.

I was at the time a High Churchman, so called; but in my estimation a Catholic, though not a Roman Catholic. I in fact agreed with those great men now creating such an immense influence in the Church of England. Pusey, Littledale, Carter, Keble, Liddon, and others, known as the Catholic party. How I could officiate in Christ Church and be of this party will easily appear from the following: When a clergyman goes into a parish not his own he is bound in honor not to give offence by word or deed. In my intercourse with the clergy I found them acting on this understanding, and I tried to act upon it too, so that when I officiated in Christ Church, as I was their guest, I was in honor bound not to give any offence, nor did I so far as I was able. Therefore knowing pretty well what were the views of the majority of the congregation, I could and did serve them in an emergency at their own request. This has been my course in Trenton, and for the same reason.

4th. I was brought up to the Church of England, by my parents who themselves had always been attached members of it. I was baptized and confirmed in the Church of England and for the thirty-five years of my life adhered to her as my spiritual mother. Even now I love her and bless her for the way she led me. She taught me Catholic doctrine, and I would now ask no better aid in defending my principles than her Prayer Book. It was her Prayer Book which taught me every Sunday to profess my belief in "One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church." She taught me by her Prayer Book to say that it "was necessary to hold the Catholic Faith," and that unless I held it without doubt I should perish everlastingly.

There is no ground at all for saying I was a Baptist, and as for being a Methodist it must have arisen from my frequently speaking approvingly of the Methodists. The Wesleyans more particularly. This habit of mine arose from the fact that in my youth I had read some of John Wesley's sermons and letters, and had been much benifited by them. I remember quite well his mentioning some Catholic who had attained to great holiness viz, Thomas A. Kempis, the Marquis de Renty, and Madame Ghyet Thomas A. Kempis's imitation of Christ was much lauded by him, and as soon as I was able I purchased the book and derived considerable benefit from it; and of course became attached to it. But this book advanced me many steps to Catholicity. I also admired the Wesleyan preachers for their vigorous preaching of Repentance and the necessity of seeking the pardon of our sins. I need hardly say that I commend them for this still, and acknowledge myself indebted to them for the vividness with which these things were impressed upon my mind. I owe them another debt and that is an early realization of the terror of hell and judgement, and the glory and happiness of heaven. The benefit I received at times led me to frequent their services, as many I suppose do. I never left the church of my baptism, and the church of my father.

5th. As to the other things alluded to by you I beg to say these too are taught me by my dear mother the Church of England. Her catechism and office for the Holy communion taught me and teaches the real presence of Christ in the sacramental species, or perhaps to express it better in the language of one of her greatest loving divines "Under the form of Bread and Wine." She taught me the Invocation of Saints and Angels when she put into my mouth the words of the Benedicite, "O Ananias, and Misaela bless ye the Lord." She taught me to honor and God venerate the Virgin and the Saints by having days and services set apart for their honor and remembrance. She taught me prayers for the dead by the Litany when she put into mouth "Remember not O Lord, our offences nor those of our fore-fathers," also in the office for the Holy communion and in the Office for the burial of the dead. As to the "Infallibility of the Pope when speaking ex cathedra" I acknowledge she did not teach it me directly, but I maintain she did indirectly for it follows from Holy Writ which she inculcates viz., "Hear the Church."

And now sir, with your kind permission I will state what rendered it an impossibility for me as a conscientious, and an honest man to remain in the Church of England while I could hold this much of Catholicity in her fold.—After careful reading about two weeks ago on one subject. The supremacy of the Pope, I became convinced that it was my duty to obey his authority. By divine grace I was enabled to accept my Saviour's declaration, fully, heartily Thou art Peter and upon this rock I will build my church; or as it would be in Syrochaldiac in which our Lord spoke Thou art Kipha and on this Kipha I will build my Church. Having accepted this I had to take the step I did, upon peril of my salvation. Like St. Paul and the eleven, I must be "with Peter," and therefor with the Pope who is his successor.

Specific Gravity of Milk.

The milk Journal, recently commenting on the quality of milk, states that its density of specific gravity is not, as is generally understood, a safe criterion of the goodness of milk. According to the Journal—

Milk, when kept two or three days, often becomes actually lighter than water. This curious fact is somewhat difficult of credence, since milk contains about ten per cent of solid matter. If correct, the great diminution in specific grvaity can only be accounted for by some molecular changes in the milk, and perpaps by the evolution of gasses. Some similar change in density also occurs when milk is shaken by transport. It is an important sanitary question whether milk which has undergone such changes is safe food for man or animal. For young or delicate animals, or for babies, or for young calves, stale milk, or even milk which has been transported a distance of several miles, is often found to be injurious, producing readily acidity, and proving otherwise difficulty of digestion: The shaking of any considerable journey appears to change the relation of the constitutents of the milk to each other, that the curd does not afterwards properly separate from the whey, nor does the cream rise, as in fresh milk, to the surface.—These changes are delayed when the milk, as is common in America, is rapidly cooled down so soon as it is drawn from the cow.

A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.—After repeated refusals to sanction the laws passed in Australia to allow marriage with a deceased wife's sister, the British Colonial Office has finally confirmed such act. The Queen always refused her assent, on the ground that the proposition was diametrically at variance with a fundamental principle of English law. Five times the Australian Parliament has passed such a law, and now it is confirmed on the express ground that it met with little opposition in either House, and that there is a strong popular feeling in its favour.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Norwood.

August 10th. 1871.

MR. EDITOR,—

As the time has almost arrived for our would-be distinguished lord and master to resume his humble duty in using the Birch and trying to put a smattering of learning into the heads of the respectable youths of our Village, I am sure it must be a humiliating position for him to occupy after thinking he had secured the Inspectorship. I do hope the late defeat along with getting a "mitten" for our severe Norwood winter, will take a little of the "wind" out of him, as it is very much needed. He is one of the noted Egotists of the day—egotistic in the extreme. Our neglect for not writing this before was, we wanted to give him a chance to clear himself by his writing when time was on his hand. But he has not attempted to do so. He said in the "Review" that if there was any facts brought against him he would reply—but there is no reply. He reported to all Norwood that he had 9 votes in the County Council, but it has been published in both papers that he had only 4. Will he confess to the slip, (we will not call it a lie), or will he clear it up. He also said the contest was betwixt him and Mr Stratton. Now we have it from good authority that it was betwixt Mr. Stratton and Mr. McFaul. We would like to know a little of his previous history.—He tries to make every one believe he is a noted personage in this County, and that there is not a young man in it who commands the respect that he does. Can this be so, or is it merely egotism, awaiting explanations.

I am,
Yours truly,
FAIR PLAY.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—

I beg the opportunity of informing you and the public that this great battle is over—the victory is mine. I am master of the field notwithstanding the insolence of my opponents. Even the Dr. is retreating. I am told the wounds are severe—of such severity that even if he gets over them he will not be the same again during his life. Single handed in the field I have beaten both those big guns, individually and collectively, with all their superiority (?) of knowledge and extraordinary (?) refinement.

The Dr. has the audacity of denying his conversation with me in reference to Mr. Carnegie's editorial, and particularly with that portion of it which says he is in the habit of doing all his writing on Sunday. He denies this and puts it down as a "malignant lie," and styles it slander. This language, Mr. Editor, I know to be false and untrue. How this man can deny it, I cannot understand. He has the presumption of calling me a liar when I can prove otherwise. What I have already stated before the public, I maintain it still without any deviation. The Doctor adds to his former lie by saying "that the letter over O'Shea's signature has been written by a person whose pen has been ever ready to slander his fellow men." I wish to let this creature know that I am as fit to do my writing as he is his; and I never forgot to tell the truth—what he has, I am sorry to say, yet to learn; and I could afford him lessons in morality and equity.

In saying that I could not pay $4.50 for a copy of the evidences, he still tries the game of slander. The words were: That I had not the money at hand, The Doctor should be the last man to reflect on any person for being poor. He should remember what a few years have done for him. Not that I want to reflect on any man because he happened to labor—as honest labor is honourable. My belief is he has reached the summit of the mountain; if he happens to slip backwards he will come down hill perhaps quicker than he ascended. My opinion is he must have more presumption than common sense in denying his conversation.

Mr. Carnegie in last week's Examiner I numbered with the dead, as he came to life since then he must have been in a trance. Last Review contains some growls from him, muttering "Billingsgate," and some other stupid nonsense. He also insinuates there is some other person "making use of John O'Shea's ignorance by using his name." This, Mr. Editor, is another falsehood. John O'Shea has done his own writing, and is able for both his opponents put together. The insinuation that another has been using my name is false and slanderous. No one has asked me or dictated to me. I wrote in defence of my character, which I consider worth something to me—as I value it more than the Editor of the Review or Dr. Kincaid appears to value theirs. What I have said I still maintain. Thanking you for inserting these lines,

I remain,
Yours respectfully,
JOHN O'SHEA.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Have you inflammatory sore throat, stiff joints, or lameness from any cause whatever? Have you rheumatic or other pains in any part of the body? If so use Johnsons Anodyne Liniment. Our word for it, it is the best medicine in the country.

CAUTION. Purchasers of the peruvian Syrup (a protected solution of the protoxide of iron) are cautioned against being deceived by any of the preparations of Peruvian Bark or Bark and Iron, which may be offered them. Every bottle of genuine has Peruvian Syrup "not Peruvian Bark" blown in the glass.

From the Easy Expectoration increased respiratory power of the lungs, and the removal of irritation, manifest from cessation of cough and other alarming symptoms, after using Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, it is clear that the formation of tuberculous matter is not only stopped, but that already deposited is being carried away.

Who Would be Without It—None, we are sure, if they knew the wonderful effect the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" has upon all kinds of aches and pains. No matter what part is effected, or from what cause it arises, the moment the Pain Destroyer is applied, that moment you will get relief. It is the greatest medicine ever known for the cure of rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, tooth-ache, sprains bruises, bowel complaints, &c. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Very Natural.

When a person has proved an article's and found it good, and answering the purpose for which it is intended, he will not readily abandon it for one of doubtful reputation, or concerning which he knows nothing. We are led to make these remarks owing to the course always pursued by those who have used that celebrated and truly valuable horse-medicine known as "Darley's Condition Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy." All are so well pleased with it that they will not use any other; many have waited several weeks untill the agent could obtain a new supply. There is nothing to it as a condition medicine for any complaint effecting the wind of the horse.—Remember the name and see that the signature of Hurd & Co., is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the Pain-Killer. The Parson's wife and Mrs Judge Jones are very, positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did all it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fashion, for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recommend the Pain-Killer, every where they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' legend came around, (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear!

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The Pain-Killer does not profess to cure everything either in the Dirabout the bottle or the "Annual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence, Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whse testimony cannot be doubted.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are Bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods.

Wife:—Julia Jones was as incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Son and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificate received from parties within five miles of his own house.

WHEREAS, the Municipal Council of the County of Peterborough have resolved to expend the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars in construction of a bridge over the Otonabee River, at the Town of Peterborough, and a new Registry Office.

And whereas, to carry into effect the said recited object, it will be necessary for the said Municipal Council to raise by way of loan the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, it will require the sum of Thirteen Hundred Dollars to be raised annually by special rate for the payment of said debt or loan, and interest, as also hereinafter mentioned.

And whereas, the amount of the whole ratable property of the said Municipality of the said County of Peterborough, irrespective of any future increase of the same, and also irrespective of any income to be derived from the temporary investment of the sinking fund hereinafter mentioned, or any part thereof, according to the last revised assessment rolls of the said Municipality is the sum of Two Millions, Seven Hundred and Twenty-three Thousand Six Hundred and Seven Dollars.

And whereas, the existing debt of the said Municipality of the County of Peterborough is Thirty-three Thousand Dollars for principal money, and Twenty Thousand, Six Hundred and Seventy Dollars, for interest, and there is nothing in arrear on account of said principal or interest.

And whereas, for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the said principal sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars as hereinafter mentioned, it will require an equal annual special rate of one-half of a mill in the dollar in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year.

Be it therefore enacted by the Municipal Council of the County of Peterborough—

That it shall be lawful for the Warden of the said County to raise by way of loan from any person or persons, body or bodies corporate, who may be willing to advance the same upon the credit of the debentures hereinafter mentioned, a sum of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars and to cause the same to be paid into the hands of the Treasurer of the said County of Peterborough, for the purposes and with the objects above recited.

That it shall be lawful for the said Warden to cause any number of debentures to be made for such sums of money as may be required, not less than one hundred dollars each, and not to exceed in the whole the sum of Twelve Thousand Dollars and that the said debentures shall be sealed with the seal of the said Municipal Council, and be signed by the said Warden, and countersigned by the Treasurer of said County.

That the said debentures shall be made payable in twenty years at farthest from the day hereinafter mentioned by this By-law, to take effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum, from the date thereof: which interest shall be payable half-yearly on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year, at the office of the Treasurer of the said municipality.

That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures, and the interest at the rate aforesaid, to become due thereon, an equal special rate of one-half of a mill in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year, upon all the ratable property in the said municipality during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

That this By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon the Sixteenth day of November, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-one.

Song of the Moderate Drinker

BY MRS. FRANCES D. GAGE.

Come listen to my song, all ye gathering throng
Tis the song of the bested "free,"
A declaration the most that has dared to pay
With the heritage "liberty."

Oh! there was a time, ay, there was a time
That I quaffed from the flowing bowl
All sparkling and bright in the rosy light,
Dark maddens to my soul.

Through years oublest was the wine cup pressed
To my lips with a steady hand,
And I boasted loud that my manhood proud,
Should ne'er wear the drunkard's brand.

Sign the pledge? Not I! I would sooner die
Than sign myself thus a slave;
For the right to think and the right to drink
Belongs to the strong and the brave.

Thus the weak and the young, with influence strong,
I led into ruin's path;
And the father's fears, and the mother's tears
I spurned with fool words of wrath.

But there came a time, even in manhood's prime,
When my spirit quailed within;
When my only boy, my hope and joy,
Fell a victim to the sin.

"Oh! talk not," cried he "of your fears for me
Away with your pledge, away!
A drunkard or not my father is not,
And he drinks with each passing day."

Ah! friends, shall I tell how my loved one fell?
How the blight of the sparkling bowl,
Though it scared my frame, with its scorching flame,
Burned its curses into my soul?

Then give me your pen, ye strong, true men,
For the day and the hour has come—
It has come at length, when my power and strength
Shall be given to conquer Rum.

Marriage Maxims.

A good wife is the greatest of all earthly blessings.

A man is what his wife makes him.

It is the mother who moulds the character and destiny of the child.

Never make a remark at the expense of the other; it is meanness.

Never part without loving words to think of during your absence. Besides it may be that you will not meet again in life.

When she who rule seems but to obey!
Never both manifest anger at once!

Never speak loud to one another unless the house is on fire.

Never reflect on a past action which was done with a good motive and with the best judgment at the time.

Let each one strive to yield oftenest to the wishes of the other, which is the mutual cultivation of an absolute unselfishness.

Never find fault, unless it is certain that a fruit has been committed.

A story is told of a citizen of Danbury, Connecticut, who was broken of the wretched habit of swearing in a novel manner. He was an inveterate curser and grumbler. At every meal he neglected a blessing, and swore at at everything, from the gravy to the teapot. His oaths discolored the podkins, scured the bread, and curdled the milk. His wife, a woman who evidently thought the hair of a dog would cure the bite, stood this unseemly conduct until forbearance ceased to be a virtue." One morning he was unusually gross and profane, and was about to take a fresh start at something else, when his wife suddenly broke out with a series of oaths that made the old gentleman get up and leave his chair as though some one had introduced a pin between the cuises. As soon as she ceased, he breathlessly remarked, "Well I swear, if it has got so you can swear, it is time I quit." And he did.

A good story is told of a Markham physician, vaccinated a family of twelve persons and charged twelve dollars. A few days thereafter he took a dozen cabbage plants in part pay as he supposed, but upon final settlement learned to his surprise, that Mr. Farmer charged doctor's price—"one dollar a-head."

It was at Admiral Washington's table that Dr. Johnson made that excellent reply to the poet Coxcomb, who absolutely batted him during dinner-time. "Pray, now," said the doctor, "what would give, old gentleman, to be as young and as sprightly as I am?" "Why, sir, I think," replied Johnson "I would almost consent to be as foolish."

Some young rascals annoyed an old gentleman by snowballing his house. He rushed out, and caught one who was looking on, and thinking him to be one of the offenders, and began flogging him. The harder he whiped, the harder he laughed, until he stoped and sought an exlanation.—"Well," said the boy, "I'm laughing because you are awfully sold; I ain't the boy!"

A remarkable family lives in Dallas county Ark. The father is 108 years old, the mother 106, and the two are the parents of twentynine children—fifteen boys and fourteen girls.

Governor Archibald talks of resigning. This news is almost too good to be true.—L'evenement says the reason is no society and testable cookery. Nothing to see nothing to eat. This is rather an uncomfortable state of affairs.

It is reported that the Government have abandoned the idea of constructing any portion of the Pacific Railway east of Fort Garry immediately. The intention is said to be the connection with the American lines for Red River and to push the construction westward.

The Genius of Energy.

There is no genius in life like the genius of energy and industry. You will learn that all the traditions so current among every young man—that certain great characters have gained their greatness by some inspiration of the air—grown out out-of-doors and mistaken. All you will further find, when you determine to provide yourself with men, when there are no rivals so formidable as those earnest, determined minds which reckon the value of every hour, and which achieve eminence by persistent application. Literary ambition may inflame you at certain periods, and a thought of some great theme will flash like sulfur into the mind of your purpose; you dream until midnight over books; you set up shadows, and chase them down—other shadows, and they fly. Dreaming will never catch them. Nothing makes the "scant be well" in the last after distinction but labor.

And it is a glorious thing when once you are weary of dissipation and ennui of your own aimless thoughts, to take up some glowing page of an earnest thinker, and read deep and long, until you feel the mental of his thoughts tingling on your brain and sinking out from your flinty lethargy flashes of ideas that give the mind light and heat. And away you go, creating on the instant, and you wondered at the fecundity of what seemed so crude. The glow of toil awakes you to the consciousness of your real capacities: you feel sure that they have taken a step toward final development. In such mood it is that one feels greatful to the musty tomes, which at other hours stood like curiosity-mummies, with no warmth and no vitality. Now they grow into the affections like new found friends, and gain a hold upon the heart and light a fire in the brain, that the years and the mold cannot cover nor quench.

The burial vault of Mary de Cosci, queen of Alexander II., and mother of Alexander III. of Scotland, who was buried at Newbattle Abbey about the middle of the thirteenth century, is now supposed to have been discovered. The vault is five feet 2 inches from the level of the old floor, 10 fet long by 7 feet wide, and paved at the bottom. The walls are of polished ashlar, with a bottle moulded stone stair of eight steps. It was entirely filled with stone rubish, and has the appearance of once having a grating over it, as there is an iron bar run in with leak in the face of the top step. The vault was discovered in the floor at the south corner of the crypt, which must have been a magnificent hall when entire, as the present entrance hall of the Abbey goes right across the middle of it. A number of the grained arches and pillars appear, it have been taken out. It was orginally 93 feet long, with a range of pillars in the centre the whole length. The Marquis of Lothian has had masons restoring the south portion of the crypt for the last six or seven months, under the superintendence of Mr. Bryce, arbitect, Edinburgh, and his own clerk of works, Mr. Blaikie. He has taken down a division wall, and put in a wide arch, which will throw the south portion of the crypt open to the lower portion of the entrance-hall.—"Courant"

He who voluntarily surrenders his reason on the altar of appetite, courts the calamities and the crimes which follow in the wake of intemperance. Drunkenness is not an apology for the vice and sin which seldom fail to accompany it; but an aggravation of the offences and crimes committed under its wicked inspiration. When a man, imbruted by the use of intoxicating liquors, commits murder, he is sure to shield himself, if possible, with the plea that he was intoxicated at the time—and his counsel will seek to palliate the deed with the excuse of insanity. If a monster stained with the blood of an unoffending victim can obtain an acquittal on such grounds, then farewell to law and equity. Life is too cheap to be safe in a community where men voluntarily "put an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains." When a man whets his appetite for rum, he prepares himself for commission of crime. Of his own free-will he quicken the baser passions of his nature, and paralyzes all the manly and noble attributes of his mind. The dram he drinks may inspire him to assault and murder the first victim he can reach with a pistol-shot, or a dirk, or a car-hook. Is he to be executed on the ground of insanity? A worthless and cruel vagabond, heedless of consequences, prepares himself for the deed of murder, and when he has hurried before his Maker the victim, without warning, without a chance for defence, without a moment for preparation—he has such a supreme to cry for the safety of his own carcase—that he, after striking the victim from behind, slinks away under the cover of darkness, and, when arrested, importunes the law to protect him, because he was drunk at the time he committed the murder. The man who drinks rum gratifies a gross appetite at the risk of the consequences which may follow. The rum is one of the instruments of murder which he chooses to take, and it gives him nerve to thrust the knife or wield the car-hook. Rum is to a bad man (and it makes good men bad) what powder and fire are to the pistol. Suppose a villain should attempt to excuse himself for committing murder because he had taken a pistol, and that he never would have done such a deed if he had not had the pistol; that the pistol did the deed; therefore he ought not to be held responsible for it; would the judge exculpate the murderer on such a plea? Here a man deliberately takes rum, more fatal than the pistol, and he knows it; and under its infernal influence he kills an innocent person; is he to be allowed to go unwhipt of justice because he was mad and drunk at the time he dyed his hands in the blood of an innocent victim?

Consumption.

A quarter of the adults in New England die of this one malady. There are several hundred diseases, but this one kills a quarter of us. Very little is really known of consumption, and many singular errors have been obtained.

1st error. It is generally supposed to be a disease of the lungs.

2nd error. That the way to treat it is to doctor the lungs themselves.

3rd error. That a cold is generally the starting point of this malady.

4th error. That a warm climate favors a cure.

5th error. That beef, cod liver oil, and whiskey are good.

6th error. That drugs are very useful.

The facts are these. Consumption is a disease of the system and may be detected in the skin, eye, secretions, and in a score of ways, long before it is located in the lungs. The taint pervading the system for months or years, is at length developed in the lungs by whatever exhausts the general vitality: as for example, a fever, a corroding grief, bad diet, late hours, bad ventilation, living in the shade, or any other depressing influence.

The cure is to be found in a cold, bracing climate, exercise in the open air, vigorous friction of the skin, a very plain, nutritious unstimulating diet, with cold water for drink, plenty of sunshine, sleep, and a hopeful, brave temper.

With such treatment and an utter abandonment of drugs, whiskey, cod liver oil, &c., a cure is certain.

The way of holiness is ever the way of happiness. Holiness is conformity to God; and the more we resemble Him, the more we shall drink of the fountain of His joy.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as this mild but efficient purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that when it does cure it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its compositon. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore the healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as has this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not fail. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in no wise injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed.

Unacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver to healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

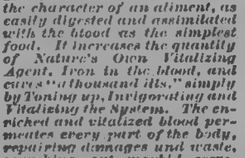
IRON IN THE BLOOD



MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Oh Never, Oh No!

In the ways of true temperance see children delighting,
So joyful and happy wherever we go;
If firm to the purpose in which we're uniting,
We shall never be drunkards—on, never, oh no!
Oh never, oh no!

The pledge we have taken must never be broken,
Although the poor drunkard may angry grow,
We must always remember the words we have spoken,
And never be drunkards—oh never, oh no!
Oh never, oh no!

The first little drop of strong drink that is taken
It is the first step to ruin o'en children may know;
If the first little drop be in earnest forsaken
We shall never be drunkards—oh never, oh no!
Oh never, oh no!

Then free from the ruin strong drink would occasion
We'll stand by our temperance wherever we go;
And if bad men should tempt we'll resist their persuasion,
And never be drunkards—oh never, oh no!
Oh never, oh no!

Lotty Sherwood's Story.

BY LIZZIE MAY.

PART I.

Oh think not my spirits are always as light,
And as free from a pang as they seem to you now;
Nor expect that the heart-beaming smile of to-night
Will return with to-morrow to brighten my brow.
No life is a waste of variegated hours
Which seldom the rose of enjoyment adorns;
And the heart that is soonest awake to the flowers
Is always the first to be touched by the thorns.
—Moore.

"I cannot understand, Lotty, how it is you are so happy and light-hearted.—There is always a smile of content upon your countenance, always a bright light in your eye that few possess, always some pleasant word for one, to cheer the saddened and delight the cheerful, and yet despite all this I flatter myself that behind the bright smile and cheery word there lurks a certain degree of sadness, which is not only irresistable, but tends to fill one with feelings the most profound, and, I was about to add, the most awful. Excuse me, but before I had the good fortune to become acquainted with you I thought all those of the world's population whom they choose to style 'old maids' must of necessity be clad invariably in dull colors, must be surrounded by tabby cats and poodle dogs, must have their noses in everybody's business, must be quarrelsome, snappish and selfish, and in fact everything that was disagreeable. But thanks to Miss Lotty Sherwood, my eyes have been opened, and I am delighted to discover that the real gem is as likely to be found in an old maid's heart as any of her neices."

"Bravo, Bell! Give me your hand on that. I am glad to find one young lady of the period, at least, who has a little of the right kind of matter in her, and I am rejoiced to say that in looking from the pinnacle to which your flattering words have raised me, down to the misty vale of the future, I see something that looks like my friend Bell Perley, wrinkled and grey, foremost in the ranks of those virtuous and honored individuals, spinsters. That is, should Wallace Beaumont prove traitor, otherwise I have no hopes whatever." And she speaker gave a merry, musical laugh.

"Wallace Beaumont, why should you bring his name in, Lotty? You puzzle me, really."

"Do I indeed. It strikes me you are not always as easily puzzled. At all events I leave the puzzle for you to solve at your leisure. Meanwhile let us lay aside this troublesome sewing and go down to our old and blissful retreat, the arbor. I feel somewhat romantic this afternoon, and when I do I always love to steal away 'from every cumbering care' and think, until the 'brain is sick and the heart benumbed.' Pleasant, is it not? Come, will you go?"

"With pleasure. What a glorious afternoon it is!"

Lotty Sherwood and Bell Perley were friends, and though one had reached the age of twenty-nine, and the other was just budding into womanhood, still their friendship was pure, and their love sincere—a fact too seldom seen existing between friends in this the nineteenth century. Lotty's parents were both dead, and the dear old homestead by the river's side had passed into the hands of strangers, and she had gone to keep house for a bachelor brother in the city. By some fortunate coincidence she had met with the family of Mr. Perley, who lived in a quiet, country village, surrounded by scenery, the most varied and beautiful, and ever since she had been invited to spend part of the summer with them, which visit was invariably returned and enjoyed by Bell during the following winter.

At the time we write Lotty was with the family, and the conversation we have already heard, passed between Lotty and her young friend Bell one summer afternoon, as they sat sewing on the veranda.

But they have now retired to the arbor. Let us follow them. Behold Lotty seated upon a low seat covered with moss. Around her are flowers of every description, and over her head a bright canopy of green leaves nodding and rustling in the breeze like little fairies chanting their matins. Her pale, thin cheek flushed with pleasure as she looked in silent rapture upon the beautiful world, and wondered how long the Great Disposer of all things should permit her to enjoy her many blessings, and a shade of sadness crept into her usually happy face. Meanwhile Bell was turning the leaves of a handsome copy of Byron's poems, reading snatches here and there, and not appearing to notice Lotty at all.

Why don't you read, dear?" Lottie said, rousing from her reverie. "Did you think I had fallen asleep with my eyes open?"

Bell laughed at the idea, and asked what she should read.

"Anything you please," was the reply.

Acting from some unknown impulse, she turned to the cornair and began in a clear, musical tone to read the song of Medora:

"Deep in my soul that tender secret dwells,
Lonely and lost to light forever more.
Save when to thine my heart responsive swells
Then trembles into silence as before."

As she finished the third verse,

"Remember me—oh pass not thou my grave
Without one thought whereon relics there recline;
The only pang my bosom dare not brave
Must be to find forgetfulness in thine,"

She was startled by hearing a quick stifled sob from Lotty, and looking up saw her wringing her hands as if in pain, while the tears rained down her cheeks in torrents.

"What is—what can be the matter Lotty," cried Bell, throwing aside the book and laying her hand upon her shoulder. "I never saw you in such distress before. Tell me, are you ill?"

But Lotty did not seem to hear, or thought she was alone, for she began talking wildly to herself. "Yes" she said, "it was just such an afternoon, in just such a place that he read these words. How sweet his voice sounded as he repeated so earnestly

"My fondest, tamest, latest accents hear;
Grief for the dead not virtue can reprove;
Then give me all I ever asked—a tear,
The first—last—sole reward for so much love."

Suddenly she became calm, and looking up, into the pale, frightened face of Bell said,

"What makes you so pale dear? I thought you were reading. Oh, I have had such an horrible dream. Your voice, together with the music of the wind among the foliage quite lulled me to sleep. Pardon me, but I really could not help it."

Bell said nothing of what she had heard or saw, but throwing her arms around Lotty's neck begged of her as a great favor to tell her the story of her early sorrow, as she felt sure she had had one.

Lotty started at Bell's words, and looking at her keenly said, "Ah I see I have betrayed myself at last, Bell, but you shall hear it dear, though it makes me sad to recall the past—the bitter, bitter past—yet I would bear anything for your sake."

PART II.

"Within this goblet rich and deep
I cradle all my woes to sleep."

"When I drink my sorrow's o'er
I think of doubts and fears no more."

Lotty drew a long sigh and pressed her hand to her heart, as if to still its throbbing and then related the following story.

I was, as you already know, the only daughter of fond and loving parents. We lived in the country, in one of the sweetest spots nature ever designed to beautify. I had one brother, older than myself by four years, and he, from his earliest boyhood showed a strong dislike for the life his father had led, and to fit for the professional life he seemed to crave, my father sent him to College. Thus we were left alone, my parents and myself, with two or three other servants, and for eight years our lives flowed on like some pleasing, fleeting dream. But at the end of that time a cloud began to appear above the horizon of our quiet happiness. My beloved mother, my best earthly friend, was suddenly smitten with inflamation and died in a few days. Scarcely had this deep wound been healed in my heart, when my father, too, was carried away suddenly, having met his death by falling off a tree.

After my father's death my brother sold the dear old homestead, and took me to live with him in the City of S——, where he was practicing medicine. We lived a very quiet life in S——, my brother being somewhat reclusive in his ideas of life, consequently I made few acquaintances, and seldom, if ever, went into company. Among the most intimate of my few friends was a young lady, the daughter of an extensive tailor, who lived next door to us. She was a pretty girl, gentle, her ways soon won my heart, and I believed she was a true friend. She seemed to be very fond of me, and we were always together. My brother told me one day after I had been acquainted with her for some months, that he wished I wouldn't be so intimate with Laura Perks, that he never liked her eyes, but he gave no other reason and I took no notice of his remarks, knowing that he was a woman-hater in general. Ah, Bell, it would have been better for me and others had I only nipped our acquaintance in the bud, before it was too late. How much sorrow I might have been spared, and how much happiness I lost by it. But I am growing tedious.

Three years passed away in this manner, and I had now reached the age of twenty-three without ever feeling the power of Cupid's darts, or even catching a glimpse of his mischievious little face. But things could not always pass in this monotonous manner, and so there came a change. A young man in the city, who had graduated with the highest honors, came to study with my brother. I cannot attempt to describe that handsome face, with its noble forehead, deep thrilling eyes, well formed mouth and bewitching smile. One glance was sufficient to captivate the most strong minded woman, to say nothing of one as simple and unsophisticated as myself.

Claude Desmond, that was his name, spent the greater part of every week in brother's library, and, as a natural consequence, we often met. Yes, Bell, I met and loved him from the first—loved as I never had before. My whole soul went out to the man in this strange new feeling I possessed, and my very life seemed wrapped in his, and in a short time I had undoubted proofs that my love was returned as fondly and fervently. He was a great favorite of my brother's, who looked with unconcealed pleasure upon our growing attachment.

Eight months of unclouded bliss sped on, and the time came when we must part.—Claude proposed attending a medical college in Scotland, and the term began in September, and it was now already near near the last of July, he must necessarily leave us. I remember the last evening he and I spent together before he left. We had wandered some little distance out of the city, to a spot called, from its quiet beauty, and the fact of so many friends and lovers frequenting it, "Love's Lane." It was a delightful spot; the trees on each side met in one grand canopy of green above, forming a beautiful avenue. Thither we bent our steps, and there, seated alone on a low moss covered log, he poured into my ear the story of his love. I was happy, Bell, happier perhaps than I ever was or can be again. The next morning we parted.

During Claude's stay with us I had not seen, or been with my friend Laura as much as formerly. I did not seek her company now that I had a dearer companion, and indeed she seemed in no way anxious to seek mine. I was too much absorbed in my present happiness to think strange of her conduct, and so the time passed on. I often noticed her watching us as we walked together, however and once during the summer time she had expressed in tones of perfect contempt her disapprobation of my increasing intimacy with a stranger. She felt sure I would certainly rue the day I met him, and in one sense her words have been true. I quarrelled with her forbade her ever coming near me again, and from that day until about a month after Claude's departure, I never saw her. Then she came with some slight message from an aunt of her's who lived in the country, with whom I had become acquainted, and whom she had been visiting. She humbly begged my pardon for wounding my feelings when we last met, and begged of me to take her back into my confidence, and to be as we were before Claude came. I was lonely, and not having discovered any real evil in the girl, I gladly forgave her, and we renewed our friendship. She stayed to tea, and before she left managed her card so well that she knew the whole history of my love affairs from beginning to end and even Claude's address. I never could tell why, or how it was she gained such an influence over me that particular afternoon, I am generally so reserved, but on that occasion she seemed to hold me in some spell which it seemed impossible for me to shake off. I often think now of that afternoon, and shudder—shudder as I remember how she looked. Never before had I noticed the evil spirit so plainly in her eyes, it seemed almost in bodily shape, and this struck me more forcibly when she bade me good night at the gate, and kissed rather than whispered "So he loves you—I hope you'll be happy," and at the next moment she was gone. Her face haunted me long after I had gone to bed, and even in my dreams I saw the same face, and she came and stood between Claude and myself. Go where I would she was always by my side hissing in that horrid voice —"So he loves you."

Time passed on, letters came regularly from Claude filled with the warmest expressions of his love, and but for Laura's strange conduct I should have been happy. She would make me read his letters to her in spite of myself, and I have often times started back in horror at the look of her face. Truly, I was completely in her power. I was afraid of her and dare not disobey.

After a while Claude's letter stopped. I could assign no reason for this. His last had only been a fac-simile of the first. I wrote, and wrote almost frantic at his silence, but no answer came. I told Laura of my distress, but she laughed a strange, fiendish laugh, and said, "I warned you of this long ago. There is no confidence to be put in man; they are all alike full of base deceit and hypocricy." I hated her from that moment, and began to think she was in some way come way connected with my present sorrow.

One day she came to my room, and from her pleasant countonance I judged she was the bearer of good news. I do know why I did so, but I exclaimed, almost unconsciously, "Oh, Laura have you heard anything from Claude?"

"Yes, she said, "be seated and I'll tell you all. Sit here, I want to look into your face while I talk."

She drew from her pocket the morning paper, as I supposed, and without preliminary remarks read in a kind of fiendish glee:

"On the 15th ult., by the Rev. Warren Small, D. D., Mr. Claude Desmond, A. M., to Miss Lotty E. Campbell, all of Edinburg."

I tried to speak, but not a sound came from my white lips; my heart seemed bursting, and my breath came hard and fast. I thought I should die, but I did not. I seemed upheld by some supernatural power.

When I recovered a little, Laura asked me if I could bear more, and on my bowing assent, she poured into my ears a series of the most outrageous stories respecting Claude, how that he smoked, drank, gambled, and in fact was an adept in all and the worst kind of dissipation, and that even while pretended to be so fond of me he was making love to half a dozen young ladies at the same time, and those, too, who were not the most virtuous. She even produced a most scandulous letter written by Claude to one of them. She placed it in my hand that I might recognise his handwriting. It was his plain enough. My heart stood still, my brain grew dizzy, and I fell.

When I awoke I was alone. I arose, trembling from head to foot, and staggered to the door. As I passed the table I noticed a letter lying upon it. I saw at once it was a telegram, and hastily tearing it open I read what astonished and thrilled me.

"Lotty, I'll be with you in a few days —Claude."

What could it all mean? I folded the letter and sat down to think. Surely this was a mystery. Why should Claude come to me after what had happened? I did not wish to see him, and the time came when we must part.—Claude proposed attending a medical college in Scotland, and the term began in September, and it was now already near near the last of July, he must necessarily leave us. BY-LAW NO.

A By-law to raise, by way of loan, the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars for purposes therein mentioned.

WHEREAS the Municipal Council of the Village of Ashburnham in the County of Peterborough, has resolved to raise by way of loan the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars for the purpose of enlarging the School House in the said Village, and to assist in paying for a Fire Engine for the Town of Peterborough, to be used for both Municipalities.

And whereas, to carry into effect the said objects it will be necessary for the said Municipal Council to raise by way of loan the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars.

And, whereas, it will require the sum of Two Hundred and Three Dollars [$203.00] to be raised annually by special rate for the payment of said debt, or loan, and interest, as also hereinafter mentioned,

And, whereas, the amount of the whole rateable property of the said municipality, irrespective of any future increase of the same, and also irrespective of any temporary investment of the sinking fund hereinafter mentioned or any part thereof, according to the last revised Assessment Rolls of the said municipality is One Hundred and Sixteen Thousand Two Hundred and Twenty-nine dollars, [$116,229]

And, whereas, the existing debt of the said Village of Ashburnham is nothing, [$0.00] and there is nothing in arrears for principal or interest.

And, whereas, for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the said One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars, it will require an equal annual special rate of one and three fourth mills in the dollar; in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year.

Be it therefore enacted by the Municipal Council of the Village of Ashburnham,

That it shall be lawful for the Reeve of the said Village to raise by way of loan from any person or persons, body or bodies corporate, who may be willing to advance the same upon the credit of the debentures hereinafter mentioned, a sum of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred dollars, and to cause the same to be paid into the hands of the Treasurer of the said Village of Ashburnham, for the purposes and with the objects herein set forth, viz.: Eight Hundred Dollars, as required by the Board of School Trustees, and Five Hundred Dollars to aid the Town of Peterborough to purchase a Steam Fire Engine and Hose

That it shall be lawful for the said Reeve to cause any number of debentures to be made for such sums of money as may be required, not less than one hundred dollars each, and not to exceed in the whole the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars, [$1,300] and the said debentures shall be sealed with the seal of the said Municipality, and be signed by the Reeve and countersigned by the Treasurer of the said Village.

That said debentures shall be made payable in ten years, at the furthest, from the day hereinafter mentioned, for this By-law to take effect at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum from the date thereof, and said interest shall be payable on the First day of January and on the First day of July in, each year, at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality.

That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of said debentures, and the interest at the rate aforesaid, to become due thereon, an equal annual special rate of one and three-fourth mills in the dollar, shall in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied, and collected in each year upon the rateable property in said Municipality, during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

And that this By-law shall take effect, and come into operation upon the fifteenth day of December, 1871.

The above is a true copy of a proposed By-law to be taken into consideration by the Municipal Council of the Village of Ashburnham, at the Yellow fever prevails at Charleston.

Mr. T. D. Croley has been awarded the building of the New Registry Office at $4,090.

In Cobourg Fall Wheat brings $1.05; Spring Wheat, 95cts. to $1.00, Barley, 50 cts. to 60cts.; oats, 35 to 40cts.

The Rochester Musical Times for August has been received. The Times always contains some of the choicest pieces of music.

CORRECTION.—In a late communication from S. Fowlis, Esq., an error crept in, which we wish to correct. The compositor made him say, in "trying to make poor ladies." It should have been "trying to make poor ladies pay."

Mr. Charles Leduc, the defeated Candidate in Ottawa County, has instituted an action for libel for $100,000 damages, against the proprietor of La Minerve newspaper, for publishing on the authority of a correspondent, that Leduc had been attacked with Mental alienation.

The Kingston Whig says that on Wednesday last just after the Steamer "Original" had left Port Dalhousie, on her way to Kingston, one of the seamen named Wm. Hatchell, deliberately threw himself overboard. An attempt was made to save him, but in vain. He was a native of the County of Wexford, Ireland.

Since the death of Renforth, the whole press of the Dominion is down on over-training. Exhibitions calculated to overtax the muscular powers of men are injurious, and ought to be decried. At the Halifax regatta and International boat races, "betting" was as bad as at "Horse Races" generally. The order of the day is "make money," and don't be over-scrupulous how.

PERSONAL:—We understand that James Millar, Esq., Reeve of Otonabee, leaves on Tuesday on a trip to his native country, Scotland. Where he intends to stay awhile, and visit the scenes of his youth, and to enjoy the pleasant breeze and beautiful scenery of the mountan and the Glen of Auld Scotia. We wish him a pleasant passage, joyful meeting of friends, and a safe and speedy return to Canada.

The Committee of the Protestant Home acknowledge with thanks the following donations for August:—Mrs. Hamilton, fresh fish; Mrs. Romaine, basket of provisions; Miss Patton, potatoes; From First Presbyterian pic-nic, per Mrs. Mack, basket of cakes; Mrs. A. Smith, large parcel of useful pieces, and a basket of Crab Apples; Mrs. Kempt, apples and syrup; Mrs. G. Shaw, a ham; From Baptist S. S. pic-nic, per Miss Walton, a basket of cake; Omitted last month, Mrs. Reid, 25 cts.

MR. SPROULE'S NEW STUDIO:—We had the pleasure of a visit to Mr. Sproule's New Studio, Hunter Street, on Monday last, and found it fitted up with the most modern improvements. At the late fire, Mr. Sproule's old rooms were destroyed completely. Since that he has built a new set of rooms and fitted them up in superior style, and using the new red light system with a plan of controlling it of his own invention, he is satisfied that he can now furnish pictures better than before. Those who wish a fac simile of self, or some one as dear as self, would do well to give Mr. Sproule a call at his new Studio.

THE CENTRAL PRISON.—The Telegraph says that a deputation of the Toronto City Council waited on the Attorney General, on Monday last, for the purpose of requesting the Ontario Government to take into consideration the fact that the city goal was a large building and well suited for the requirements of a central prison. The Premier informed the deputation that the central prison to be built in Toronto, and for the erection of which the Government had already received tenders, was intended for the incarceration of males alone, and that he would lay before the Cabinet any proposition the City Council had to make with reference to the sale of the city jail for central purposes for female imprisonment.

TRIALS OF ENGINES AT BARRIE:—Two Engines, the Seneca Falls machine and the Engine of Clapp Jones, & Co.

The Clapp machine, 4,360lbs, got up steam sufficient to throw water 50 feet in 5 minutes and 59 seconds. Through 650 feet of hose threw water 165 feet and spray 193 feet, 1 3-16 nozzle. Through 1000 feet of hose she threw water 190 feet and spray 195 feet, with 1 1-16 nozzle, and 30 feet over the flag-staff on the Town Hall. The Seneca Falls Engine, 5,600lbs, through 1 1-8 nozzle, threw water 160 feet and spray 180 feet with 1000 feet of hose, with 7/8 nozzle threw water 172 feet and spray 192 feet, with 1 1-8 nozzle just over the flag-staff.

RECOVERED.—We are glad to be able to announce the complete recovery of Dr. Kincaid, as will be seen by referring to the Review of last week. The Dr. is very much annoyed at John O'Shea for bringing him to task for some little affair between themselves; but not satisfied with denying Mr. O'Shea's charges, the Dr. maligns others. John O'Shea so far as we know wrote his own communications, no person of whom we know aiding him, nor was he ever solicited to do so by us or by any one for us. It is a malicious slander of Doctor Kincaid to say so. We have nothing to do with Mr. O'Shea other than publish his letters, for which he paid us, as he was anxious to defend himself against his maligners. His language was very pointed, just about as sharp as his awl—and this, no doubt, has vexed the Doctor. He should remember, however, that if a jewel be bright, no matter who says it is counterfeit. The slander of Doctor Kincaid would not cause us to deviate an iota from rectitude. The last letter of the Doctor to the Review cannot have been written on Sunday or it would be tempered with truthfulness.

Rosenweig who is accused of the "Trunk Murder" is the son of a butcher, whom he assisted. He afterwards became a barber in Poland; coming to New York he attended bar for a while; afterwards attended a doctor of the infamous class, who sometime ago was found out and punished. Rosenweig will in all probability get punished too.

PETERBORO.—The Board of School Trustees met yesterday evening, and agreed to the estimates for the year required for all purposes, viz: $5,120. We will give it in detail next week. They, also, appointed Mr. Stratton Inspector for the Town. The Board will meet next Wednesday evening to settle the matter of the attendance of non-residents.

The Committee for the building of the Otonabee Bridge have not yet arrived at any definite course of action We understand that there is a disposition to encourage Home Manufacture If Mr. Wm. Hamilton can succeed in doing the work, by all means let him have it; but the Committee should have the work on the way. The spring floods will sweep away the present structure if it remain so long. There is also great inconvenience to the travelling public, as teams cannot pass on the temporary bridge. When farmers begin to move in their produce they will be annoyed waiting for one set of teams after another, as, if one gets on first he has the right of way. The Committee should go to work and get the bridge on the way. It has to be built anyway, and the sooner the better.

The Minden Herald, a little 7x9 rag, published in the notorious Minden district, of course, for the public men who surround it, again sets up a yelp about the remarks we made a few weeks ago, when we wondered if the editors thereof were clear of the blanket question.

To the yelps of the Herald, we answer that the late Local Superintendent on report of the Finance Committe (said report made at the end of June session of the County Council) received the sum of $250, as payment for services. If anything but what was lawful and justly due had been obtained it would have been demanded. Not only that, but at the same meeting of the County Council, knowing something of his opponents, he laid his claims before the Finance Committee, and had the satisfaction of getting those $250 dollars voted to him, without a dissenting voice. Besides it is not true that he acknowledged neglect of duty, but he acknowledged that ten visits in five years had not been made, because teachers had been absent when he visited the particular section or no teacher engaged at the time. He performed his duties more faithfully than any one yet holding the office, and never received a cent but what was honestly earned, and if he now knew of a single cent unjustly obtained it would be immediately repaid. If the editors of the Herald will take the trouble to read the published accounts they will see their names for blankets; perhaps that is the reason the quondam enemies are now fast friends. Two years ago the late superintendent told the County Council, in Committee that he would not revisit vacant schools no matter from what cause, and with that knowledge they twice reengaged him.

Ashburnham.

The Council met on Monday evening and after confirming the minutes of the previous meeting, passed a By-law to grant aid towards purchasing and keeping in repair the new steam fire engine bought by the town, on condition that the village, through the Reeve, have a say in the management of it.

A By-law was also prepared and passed through two readings, to provide for borrowing $1,300, by issue of Debentures, as required by the Board of School Trustees, and to aid in paying for the new steam fire engine purchased by Peterborough.

The time for issuing the debentures is ten years, and the rate necessary yearly will be one and three fourth mills in the $.

The By-law will be read a third time on the 4th of December.

The Council adjourned to the 1st Monday in October.

The New Fire Engine.

The new Engine has been tried and although not coming up to the expectations of all, she nevertheless did good work. Through five hundred foot of hose she threw water about 175 feet, there being little difference between the distances 500 feet and 250 feet of hose.

On Monday they tested her power to pump water when it was found that she pumped through open hose 328 gallons per minute. Steam was got up the first day in 5 minutes and 20 seconds, capable of forcing water 150 feet through the nozzle. Water was forced over the Caisse House and over the flag poles on it,—also as high as the pole on the top of the fire-ball tower So that on the whole the trials were reasonably satisfactory. The guarantee of pumping 400 gals. per. minute was not made good, but this was held to be owing to an injury in the suction hose received while on the train coming here.

The Fire Committee, we understand, have arranged to get a larger one—one capable of throwing more water. The present one to remain here until the other arrives. The price of the larger one is to be the same as this one—with perhaps a little less finish, as this one is a perfect finish, indeed.

In reference to the price of the engine, it was found that there was not much ground for charges of shaving Peterboro, the company sometimes underselling all rival companies, to suit their own fancies, or to force their engines on the market.

The Barrie Engine, a size larger with 1000 feet of hose, was sold for $4,800 green backs, Barrie paying duty and freight, or about $4,325 Canadian money. The 500 feet additional hose would be worth $625—making a trifling difference in favor of Peterboro, but the Barrie Engine is larger and capable of doing more work, we believe.

We can find no reason to charge the fire committee with dereliction of duty, nor the Silsby Coy. with taking the committee in to any great extent. The fact that the company has agreed to take this engine back and give a larger one for the same price speaks in their favor.

It is said that the Committe is also about to order 500 feet more hose, making 1000 feet in all. If they do so the citizens will, no doubt, bear them out in thus placing additional chances of protection to the property in the Town.

The New School Act.

We have received a Circular from the Rev. Dr. Ryerson, Chief Superintendent of Education, in vindication of his course in the preparation of the New School Bill, and also in the matter of preparing the papers for the late examinations of teachers throughout the province.

That the New School Act, on the whole, is an improvement on preceding School Acts in this province, few will doubt. Its provisions if fairly carried out must ere long secure a class of teachers of a higher standard than their predecessors, and, let us hope, better qualified for the duties of their profession than the majority of teachers of the past twenty-five years were.

The teacher now can obtain a provincial certificate without going to the Normal School, if he but use his time and opportunities as he should do. The trouble, too, of being brought up for re-examination yearly, is done away with. Those receiving third class certificates being examined only after three years; those receiving second and first class certificates not being forced to go to the Board again unless they wish to obtain a higher grade of certificates.—So that really teachers are benefitted by these changes.

Higher salaries, too, must necessarily follow the thinning out process that takes place at each examination. A great many teachers would sooner turn their attention to something else than run the risk of being "plucked." And as this will leave the number of teachers below the required number to meet the present wants of the Country, at least for a time, larger salaries will be demanded and will have to be paid. Whether this shall be in the interest of the Country or of Education, remains yet to be seen, for not always does it happen that the best scholar is the best teacher—There ought in all cases to be a certain number of marks allowed for aptness to teach and conduct a school; hence in this respect the present mode of examination is defective, as there is no power given the Examiners to take aptness to teach into account at all. There should also be power to grant provisional certificates for any period short of a year, and especially to those teachers found giving satisfaction in their different sections, although not obtaining the requisite number of marks to secure a certificate.

The regulations, that, unless having taught three years, candidates could only apply for a third class certificate, increased the number of applicants for third class certificates and limited the number of candidates for second class certificates, so that really nothing can be assumed from the fact that there were few applicants for first or second class certificates. Besides a large number of those holding first class County Board certificates hold them for unlimited periods, and as these are legal until called in by the Boards granting them, these teachers did not go forward at the late examinations. The comparative standing, therefore, of teachers holding Normal School first class certificates and those holding County Board first class certificates, cannot be inferred from the results of the late examinations, except in favour of those who applied for first class certificates, as 9 out of 14 succeeded; that is, nearly 65 of the applicants succeeded - not at all bad for teachers from County Boards, under the circumstances.

The new system of examination will prove more satisfactory than the old, as the standard will be more uniform. It is well known that teachers receiving first class certificates in one County, have had difficulty to obtain even a third class certificate in another County. Some examiners basing their idea of qualification on the candidates' proficiency in Algebra and Euclid, and other examiners being desirous to reward those who were well prepared to teach the more rudimentary parts of school work; believing that this was more necessary and useful than Geometry in schools, where not three pupils would be found studying Geometry, while forty to eighty would be found in the common branches of Reading, Writing, Geography, Arithmetic and English Grammar. A real benefit has been conferred on the County by limiting the number of the Board of Examiners to not more than five; three would be large enough. There is now less chance for favouritism than under the old system. In regard to cutting off old teachers, this would be exceedingly unwise. Very many of them hold County Board Certificates until cancelled—those holding these certificates were considered worthy teachers and many of them were, and are, superior teachers. To cut them off, or call them in for examination, will cause them to give up the profession, which would be an injury in many cases, not to them only, but to the cause of education in their neighborhoods. And Boards of Examiners should be slow to cancel the certificates that have been honorably obtained. There will be distinction enough between them and those holding Provincial Certificates.

The following Minute of a meeting of the Norwood Board of School Trustees, held on Saturday last, have been sent us with a request to publish it; and as an item of news we comply with the request.

"Moved by Mr. Butterfield, seconded by Mr. Scott,

"That whereas, the Peterboro Examiner, of the 31st ultimo, contains a letter over the signature "Fair Play," and professing to be written by a resident of this village; and the writer of the said letter endeavours to stigmatize the character, injure the reputation, and belittle the success which has attended Mr. Moore in the discharge of his duties as Principal of our High and Public School.

"Be it therefore Resolved That the Board of the said High and Public School, now met, express their belief that the writer of the article referred to is some malicious individual whose opinions and statements are not worthy of credence; and that they further express their utmost satisfaction with Mr. Moore's conduct and with the manner in which he has discharged his duties as a Principal of the said School."

Well may Mr. Moore say save me from my friends. Had not an over zealous friend thrown out some base and malicious assertions, "Fair Play" would never have got the light of day. But he, with whom he had taken sweet counsel, often, led him to do what he ought not to have done, and thus by his false assertions induced the publication of the letter. If "Nuffsed" would like to read a few letters concerning himself we could gratify him.

The Manufacturer and Builder for September is received and is an excellent number. The articles are prepared with great care and ability.

How O'Donohoe was Beaten

"In the County of Peterborough, where Mr. John O'Donohoe, a prominent Catholic of this city, and a leader in the new movement, was nominated by the Reformers for one of the Ridings of that County—Mr. Fairbairn, a Protestant Reformer, being the nominee for the other, the Catholic electors agreed to vote for Fairbairn, on condition that the Reformers of the other section would support O'Donohoe.—When the day of election arrived Fairbairn was elected by the combined Reform and Catholic vote, while O'Donohoe was defeated, owing to the defection of the Protestant Reformers, a large number of whom refrained from voting."—Montreal Witness correspondence.

To which the Globe replies:—

"This statement is incorrect. Mr. O'Donohoe's nomination secured the entire support of the Reformers of East Peterborough, who voted for him not as a Catholic or in consequence of any such league as mentioned above, but as a tried and trusted member of the Liberal party. Mr O'Donohoe was defeated not by defection in the Reform ranks, but in consequence of the short time allowed for canvassing some parts of the Riding, he had not an opportunity even of visiting. Wherever he spoke he found strength."

And to which we reply the Globe is wrong, and the Witness right. In proof of this assertion, we need only point out that in consequence of O'Donohoe receiving the support of his co-religionists, the Township of Douro, which gave Mr. Read a majority of 158 in 1867, gave O'Donohoe a majority of 114, which alone was sufficient to reduce Mr. Read's majority in 1867, from 399 down to 127. If to this were added, the secession from Mr. Read's supporters from the same cause in other localities, O'Donohoe would have been elected had those who voted for Mr. Ingram in 1867 also voted for him. But we are proud to say that they did not, some of them even voting for Mr Read, while the great Mass of them stayed at home. It was only those "Grits," who, having no minds of their own, follow Brown whithersoever he goeth, that could swallow the dose presented to them in the orator of the Toronto Hibernian Society.—Review

This is not so. Mr. O'Donohoe was defeated because he had not time to visit the Riding and see the electors, and because the friends of Mr. Read reported through part of the Riding the day before and the day of the polling, that the Roman Catholic electors were voting for the Sandfield Candidates everywhere, and this prevented many from voting for him. There was no defection in the Reform ranks. Mr. O'Donohoe never visited the back country north of Lakefield. He held only two meetings in Dummer, two in Douro, and one in Belmont. Had not other influence than defection been at work, he would have been elected. Of those who refrained from voting, very few did so through defection, but because of unfounded calumnies that were circulated, and almost sworn to by the friends of Mr. Read and the defeated candidate for the West Riding. The unjust and selfish conduct of the Combination had alienated enough Conservative votes to elect Mr. O'Donohoe had not influences prevented them recording their votes. There was no agreement with Reformers to vote for O'Donohoe, as a Catholic, for the Catholics again and again averred that they would sooner bring out and vote for a liberal Protestant. Mr. O'Donohoe was solicited to become a candidate because he had been a life-long Reformer, and because he was the most likely outsider to carry the election.

A Dublin Riot

SEVERE HAND-TO-HAND FIGHTING.

Dublin, Sept. 5th.—The disturbances, though momentarily suppressed in the afternoon, broke out again with increased fury. Later in the evening the crowd which had been dispersed by the police collected again and attacked them. There was fierce fighting all night. The police made several savage charges, but were repelled by the enraged populace with sticks and a shower of missiles. At one time the crowd obtained so completely the upper hand that the police were driven into the barracks. A perfect bombardment of stones was then kept up by the people who smashed all the windows. After some delay the police force in the barracks obtained reinforcements, and charged the crowd with desperate fury. A ensued, the upshot of which was that the police were driven back into the barracks. Again and again they sallied, but with the same result. At last, by a grand effort, they beat a way for themselves, and broke the crowd up. During the melee which followed an iron bar was thrown at the police from a tavern at the corner of Queen street, where several rioters had taken refuge. The police thereupon stormed the house, broke the doors and captured the inmates, whom they belabored with savage blows. The mob made a desperate attempt to

HAND-TO HAND FIGHT

RESCUE THE PRISONERS,

and a battle ensued, during which the house battered and half destroyed. The rioters threw themselves with frantic rage upon the police without being able to deliver their friends. The prisoners on their way to the police stations and in their cells, sang seditious songs throughout the night. The

EXCITEMENT IS VERY GREAT,

and is still increasing. It cannot yet be stated, with certainty, how many persons have been wounded or killed. The troops were day and night under arms, but did not interfere, as the authorities were apprehensive that terrible slaughter would be the consequence. Only 27 of the rioters arrested yesterday were sentenced to three months imprisonment.

THE PRISONERS CHEERED AND THE POLICE MEN HISSED.

London, Sep. 5. A dispatch from Dublin says that the prisoners taken by the police during the riots were cheered by the people, while the officers of the law were hissed. The rioters were assisted by a large number of women in their assault upon the police.

A Diabolical Crime Revealed through Somnambulism.

The particulars of the murder of Miss Pardonner of Attica, Ind., have come out by the somnambulistic confession of the guilty parties. A Lafayette newspaper says: "The principal actors in the affair are a young man named Greer Hart, well known in this city as 'Bully Hart,' said to be a son of Isaac W. Hart, of Attica, a young man named Manfred Browning, and the proprietor of a lung testing machine, whose name our informant was unable to learn. It appears after the murder, Hart went to bed very much under the influence of liquor, and in his drunken stupor talked in his sleep in the presence of his wife and mother in law in such a manner as led them to believe that he was one of the guilty parties. The next morning his wife accused him of the crime, and he confessed it, but charged her not to say anything about it, and threatened her life if she did.

The dread secret was, however, too much for her to keep, and in the afternoon she divulged it, and Hart was arrested, upon which he confessed every thing. He says that on the night of the murder he was watching the girl while she was engaged in milking the cow. He threw a clod of dirt into her pail, upon seeing which she emptied it and went into the house and washed it out. During her absence he drove the cow through the alley, to the rear of Rogers' soap factory, the girl following. Arriving there Hart approached and struck her on the head with a pair of brass knuckles, which felled her to the earth. Browning and the other man then came up, one of whom stuffed a handkerchief into her mouth and choked her. The two latter then proceeded to violate her person.

At the conclusion of their hellish work they discovered that their victim was dead. They took up the body and hid it in a chicken coop near by, where it remained until two o'clock in the morning, when they removed it and deposited it in the canal, where it was found. Hart was locked up on Friday night and the others on Saturday morning. After the facts became known the Town of Attica was fearfully excited, and there was strong talk of taking the criminals out of the calaboose and hanging them.

When our informant left, the excitement was surrounded by three or four hundred persons, who seemed intent on swift and sure punishment, but it is hoped that better counsel prevailed and that the law will be allowed to take its course. Young Hurt is represented as a bad boy and has been for several years past. At least he has bad reputation here, where he is well known among a certain class. It is also said that he is married to a woman whose reputation was at the time none the best. The other two parties are not so well known.

A wealthy resident of the City of Brotherly Love has given $300,000 to the Presbyterian Hospital there, with the express understanding that his name shall not be published. His modesty is so much more remarkable than his generosity even, that the local papers, having no knowledge of a precedent of the kind, doubt if the liberal donor be a Philadelphian.

The Washington Government pays more to its army pensioners than it does for the support of either the army or the navy. The following are the figures for the present year: War appropriation, $20,000,000; naval appropriation, $20,000,000; pension appropriation, $34,500,000. Of the amount appropriated for pensions, $4,550,000 is for the survivors of the war of 1812.

The manner in which so many allow themselves to be sacrificed by their love of wealth reminds one of the monkey, that caricature of our species. In Algiers the Kabyle peasant attaches a gourd, well dried to a tree, and places within it some rice.—The gourd has an opening nearly sufficient to admit the monkey's paw. The monkey comes to the tree at night, inserts his paw, and grasps his booty. He tries to draw it back, but it is clenched, and he has not the wisdom to unclench it, so there he stands till morning, when he is caught, looking as foolish as may be, though with the prize in his grasp.

An Extraordinary Robbery.

ORILLIA, Aug. 28.—Last Saturday night, about 11 o'clock, two men applied for admittance at the house of Mr. Thos. Hopkins, Sr., stating that they were travellers and were benighted, and asked for lodging and stable room for their horses. Mr. Hopkins opened the door and went out to show them the barn to put up their horses never suspecting the intention of the ruffians. They had proceeded but a short distance towards the outhouses when the girl, Ellen Robins, heard noise and sounds of blows. She ran out, and on her arrival at the scene of the conflict she discovered the poor old man lying on the ground, his head and face all cut and bleeding, and several of his ribs either broken or injured from the rough, fiendish usage which he had sustained at the hands of those cowardly miscreants. The girl Robins begged of them for God's sake to spare Mr. Hopkin's life. They in return threatened her with criminal assault, and were about proceeding with their design, but were only deterred by some noise. They demanded the keys, and on receiving them, asked for the box or trunk where the money was kept. The girl showed them the cash box. They rifled its contents, taking $400 and a gold watch. Although their faces were blackened they were partially recognized. They tried to change their voices also. Notwithstanding all these precautions these men can be indentified without difficulty The numbers of the bills and the banks are known and will be published. These scoundrels informed the girl and old man that there were five of them in the gang, and if he raised any noise or disturbance in searching for or trying to recover the same, they would return and burn the house and murder them. The whole community are in a furious state of excitement in consequence of this occurrence whose atrocity has roused feelings of the deepest indignation against the perpetrators of this robbery. Mr. Hopkins is held in deservedly high esteem. J. R. Cotter, crown and county attorney, Barrie, has been communicated with in relation to the above robbery and assault.

Henry Rogers, of Mont al, who fell over Montmorenci Cliff, remains still insensible and dangerously ill.

The lumbermen of Ottawa consumed one million dollars worth of pork in their operations last season.

A French Canadian from Papineauville named Gregoire Arvisais, fell from the evening passenger train at Pakenham, Sep. 5, and was run over by that and the first-class car. His injuries were so severe that he died at 5 o'clock this morning.

At Gananoque, Sep. 5, Thomas Marton, an employee of the Grand Trunk railway was killed about 10 o'clock last night, at Gananoque station, by a freight train going east. He was in company with some unknown man, who has decamped. A coroner's jury will be empannelled to-day to elect particulars. Deceased was about 23 years of age, and unmarried.

In repairing the residence of the late David Sears, in Boston, the workmen found a large room, the entrance to which had been concealed so well that no one living knew there was such a room in the house. In that room were 131 dozen of Madeira wine, which must be at least 40 years old, and is valued at $10 a bottle, $15,729 for the lot.

OBITUARY. Mr. W. M. Nicholson, of the Barrie Examiner, died in that town on Tuesday, 22nd, after a short illness. He was for some time connected with the Hamilton Spectator, Ottawa Citizen, and other papers. News of his decease will be received with regret by journalists, amongst whom he was well known.

BROKE HER NECK.—As Mr. Stafford McBratney, Reeve of Elizabethtown, was returning home on Saturday night, with his wife his horses run away. They were thrown out of the buggy and Mrs McBratney's neck was broken. The horses were found soon after by Mr. Clue. Mr. McBratney was not materially injured. The loss is generally regretted, as Mrs McBratney was an estimable woman and much respected. Napanee Express.

ANOTHER FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—The Erie mail train bound west collided with the Empire freight train going east, between 7 and 8 o'clock on the morning of August, 26th about one and a half miles west of Westport station, on the middle division of the Philadelphia and Erie railroad. Eight persons were killed and from twenty to thirty injured. The passenger train was about an hour late, near Williamsport, running at a speed of about thirty-five miles per hour. The freight was running at about a rate of eighteen miles per hour. The trains, meeting on a sharp curve, were not visible to each other till they were only a few yards apart and the speed was not checked. The baggage and smoking cars of the mail train were telescoped all but a few feet. The passengers in two cars in rear were uninjured. An official investigation shows that the accident was caused by the conductor and engineer of the mail train to obey the orders given them not to pass Westport until the freight train had arrived there. A copy of the order was found in the pocket of the engineer, who was believed to be fatally injured, but later intelligence reports him improving though still unable to speak,

RENFORTH.—Renforth was the champion oarsman of Great Britain, was a short, thick set sturdy fellow, looking as if he were made of the toughest kind of muscle from head to foot. He weighed 154 pounds and was 5 feet 7½ inches in height. His disproportionately short legs gave him an awkward, clumsy look while walking, but this peculiarity of form was to his advantage in rowing. He was a quite uncommunicative man—spoke when he spoke at all, with a broad, North of England accent; and looking as if his training had gone to make muscle rather than brains. Renforth was born near Newcastle on Tyne, and in early life was a soldier in an East India regiment. After his return to England he first became famous as a swimmer, and it was not till 1865 that he began to make a reputation with the oars. His first great victories were in 1868 with single-scull races with brother Robert and James Boyd. The same year he Remedy for Colic in Horses.—This morning I had a horse attacked with the 'colic,' as farmers and horse owners often have, and as the cure I used in this instance had proved the best thing ever tried by me, and as I have used it so many times with success, I concluded that to perfect and simple a cure should be made known in the columns of your paper. As soon as the animal is discovered to be unwell, get some common table salt, (a pint or so) and place on the back immediately at the point where the back bone and hips unite, and sprinkle with water from a basin or pail until the salt dissolves. Then apply again as before and leave the horse with the damp salt on his back. This has cured the most inveterate cases, and I have never known it to fail. Whatever urea it may depend on a cure.

The so-called Canadian Annexationists of New York are preparing for a grand demonstration in New York on the 12th of October, in honor of Columbus, and to advance annexation. They are also to convert the Lower Canadians; to induce Hon. Mr. Papineau to address them on the 12th; and they intend to do many wonderous things. It will all end in smoke and effusive oratory, like other projects of the same club.

When a person has proved an article and found it good, and answering the purpose for which it is intended, he will not readily abandon it for one of doubtful reputation, or concerning which he knows nothing. We are led to make these remarks owing to the course always pursued by those who have used that celebrated and truly valuable horse-medice known as "Darley's Condation Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy." All are so well pleased with it that they will not use any other; many have waited several weeks untill the agent could obtain a new supply. There is nothing to it as a condition medicine for any complaint effecting the wird of the horse.—Remember the name and see that the signature of Hurd & Co., is on each package. Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the Pain-Killer. This Parson's wife and Mrs Judge Jones are very positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did all it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fashion, for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recomend the Pain-Killer, every where I go they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' agent came around. (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear!

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The Pain-killer does not profess to cure everything either in the Dirabout the bottle or the "Annual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence. Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whos testimony cannot be doubted.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are Bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods.

Wife:—Juddo Jones was as incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Son and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificate seceived from parties within five miles of his own home.

That the said debentures shall be made payable in twenty years at further from the day hereinafter mentioned by this By-law, to take effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum, from the date thereof; which interest shall be payable half-yearly on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year, at the office of the Treasurer of the said municipality.

That this By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon the Sixteenth day of November, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-one.

Select Poetry.

Going Home.

Where are you going so fast, old man?
Where are you going so fast?
There's a Valley to cross and a river to ford,
There's a clasp of the hand and a parting word
And a tremulous sigh for the past, old man,
The beautiful, vanished past.

The road has been rugged and rough, old man
To your feet it is rugged and rough;
But you see a dear being with gentle eyes
Has shared your labor and sacrifice.
Ah! that has been sunshine enough, old man;
For you and me, sunshine enough.

How long since you passed o'er the hill, old man,
Of life? o'er the top of the hill!
Were there beautiful vines on the other side?
Were there flowers and trees, with their branches wide,
To shut off the heat of the sun, old man,
The heat of the fervid sun?

And how did you cross the waves, old man,
Of sorrow; the fearful waves?
Did you lay your dear treasures, one by one,
With an aching heart, and "God's will be done,"
Under the wayside dust, old man,
In the grave 'neath the wayside dust?

There is sorrow and labor for all, old man;
Alas! there is sorrow for all;
And you, peradventure, have had your share,
For eighty long winters have whitened your hair
And they've whitened your heart as well, old man;
Thank God, your heart as well.

You're now at the foot of the hill, old man;
At last at the foot of the hill!
The sun has gone down in golden glow,
And the Heavenly City lies just below,
Go in through the pearly gate, old man—
The beautiful pearly gate.

Gems of Thought.

If the way to heaven be narrow, it is not long.

An image of gold is sure of worshipers, if it be only a golden calf.

The last act in life is like the last number of a sum, ten-times greater then any of the rest.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it rush to it, it may soon run itself out of breath.

It is every way better to do what God intends for us then what we intend for ourselves.

There is often more love in a frown than a smile. "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten."

A guilty conscience is like a whirlpool, drawing in all to its self when would otherwise pass by.

When God has a word of command, faith has an ear to hear, a heart to be willing, and feet ready to go on his errand.

Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or like the summer, aglow with promises; and the autumn, one with the golden sheavers, where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

Sleep, Fainting, Apoplexy.

When a man is asleep his pulse beats and one lungs play, but he is without sense and you can wake him up.

If a man faints, he too, is without sense, but he has no pulse and does not breathe.

Apoplexy is between the two; the heart beats, the lungs play, as in sleep, and there no sense as in fainting, but you cannot make the man back to life.

In sleep, the face is natural; in a fainting fit, it has the pallor of death; in apoplexy, it is swollen, turgid, and fairly livid.

If a man is asleep let him alone; nature will wake him up as soon as he has got sleep enough.

When a person faints all that is needed is to lay him down flat on the floor, and he will "come to" in double quick time. If fainted because the heart missed a beat, failed for an instant, failed for only once to send the amount of blood to the brain. If you place the patient in a horizontal position, lay him on his back, it does not require much force of the heart to send blood on a level to the head; but you set a man up, the blood has to be shot upward to his head, and thus requires much more force; or, in wine cases out of ten, if a person faints and falls to the floor, the first done is to run to him and set him on a chair.

In apoplexy, as there is too much blood in the head, every one can see that the best position is to set a man up, and the blood naturally tends downward, as much so as water will come out of a bottle when turned upside down, if the cork is out.

A SHREWD MERCHANT.—A wholesale grocer in this City, who became rich in his business, says his rules always was, when he sold a bill of goods on credit, to immediately subscribe for the local paper of his editor. So long as his customer advertised liberally and vigorously, he knew that as soon as he began to contract his advertising space, he took the fact as evidence that there was trouble ahead, and he invariably went for his debt. Said he, "the man who feels too poor to make his business known, is too poor to do business." The withdrawing of an advertisment is an evidence of weakness that business men are slow to observe and act upon.—N. Y. Times.

A college student being examined in Locke where he speaks of our relations to the Deity, was asked, "What relations do we most neglect?" He answered, with much simplicity, "Poor relations, sir!"

"Come, Bill, it's ten o'clock, and I think we had better be going, for it's time honest men were at home" "Well, yes," was the answer, "I must be off, but you needn't on my account."

"Tom, where's that counterfeit ten-dollar bill you had a while ago?" "Well I never was quite clar in my mind about dat are bill. Some days I thought it was a bad bill, an' odder days I thought it was a good bill; and one of dem days when I thought it was a good bill, I jes' passed it away."

A farmers wife lately entered a druggist's shop and handed him two prescriptions to be prepared—one for her husband and one for her cow. Finding however, that she had not sufficient cash to pay for both, she took away that for the cow saying: "To-morrow will do well enough for my husband".

A Yankee peddler, passing a solitary house among the hills, noticed a dozen less of faces staring from a single window looking out on the road to get a glance at such a ger. Stopping his cart and calling to a man standing at the door, this question ensued;

Peddler: "I say, has there been a funeral lately?"

Inhabitant of the House: "Not's I know on."

Peddler; "Because I see there's one of glass that hain't got no lace to it."

Inhabitant of the House: "Tell you what, if you don't start along pretty darned smart there'll be a funeral, and you'll go to it tew.

"What makes you look so grum, Tom?" "Oh, I have had to endure a sad trial of change."

"What on earth was it?"

"Why, I had to tie a pretty girl's bonnet for her ma was looking on."

"How do you feel this morning, James?" "Very much better, I thank you. I did feel a while ago I was not as well; but now I am better now, for I just met old Stubbs, the undertaker, and he looked at me."

A Young Girl's Influence.

BY JENNIE E.

Speaking of the sin of intemprance one evening, and old gentleman with silver hair remarked that many a one had been saved through the gentle influence of a woman, and requested leave to tell the following story to illustrate the fact:

The little Village of Brier Dell lay basking in the sunlight of a bright winter afternoon. In spite of its romantic name, it was a bustling, active little town, though not very large. Brier Dell had always been a strictly temperate town, a Good Templars' lodge being one of its principal features. Many a one had appeared on the spot requesting land enough to build a saloon upon, but always being sent away as quickly as possible, as if his very presence tainted the pure air.

But one ill-fated day two dark, evil-looking individuals appeared in town, bought a lot, and commenced the erection of a building. In answer to the questions of the inhabitants, they replied that they were building a drug store. Said inhabitants expressed their approbation, and wondered why no one had thought of putting in one before. But, ah, how little they knew what a curse it would prove!

Well, the building was finally finished, and the proprietors placed drugs upon the shelves and whiskey under the counters. The good people of Brier Dell looked solemnly at one another, and shook their heads, but, for a wonder, took no measures to put a stop to such shameful proceedings.

In the suburbs of the town several good buildings had been erected, and on the particular afternoon of which I speak, a young man emerged from one of these and sauntered slowly up the street. Glancing at his face, you would set him down at once as genial, honest and even-tempered. A frank, open face, merry blue eyes, broad high forehead, and wavy, brown hair; altogether quite a handsome young fellow, and a great favorite with every one.

While he was sauntering up the street, a young girl, was saying to her mother:—"Now, mamma dear, you must lie still and rest, and I will run up town and get your medicine." Her voice was low and sweet, and her dark brown eyes were full of love and tenderness.

I was standing by the door of the store as she came in, while on the other side a party of wild, reckless young fellows were trying to persuade the aforesaid young man to take a "social glass with them.—He refused for some time, saying he had never tasted liquor, and, what was more, he never intended to. But they kept urging him and telling him that one glass would do him no harm.

He hesitated, looked at the glass, and hesitated again, but finally taking it in his hand, said: "I will drink this, but not another drop as long as I live." The others looked at one another and winked.

The young girl who had just come in took it all in at a glance. Her face grew pale and her eyes filled with sad reproach, but, stepping firmly to the young man, she laid her hand upon his arm, and said in a low but firm tone: "Willis, for the love of God, and for your mother's sake, don't touch it."

For a moment he looked angry, but the next an expression of shame and sadness came into his eyes, and, setting down the glass, he turned towards her and said:—"You have saved me from shame and humiliation, and I thank you more than I can tell."

"I knew him well," continued the old gentleman, as he finished his narrative, "and from that day till the day of his death he never touched a drop of liquor, and all through the gentle influence of that young girl."—Arthur's Home Journal.

WHY ANIMALS NEED SALT:—Prof. Jas Johnson, of Scotland, says, that if half the saline matter of the world, (75 per cent) consists of common salt, and as this is partly dissolved every day through the skin and kidneys, the necessity of continual supplies of it to the healthy body is obvious. The bile also contains soda, one of the ingredients of salt, as a special and indispensible constituent and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist digestion, nor the cartilages to be built up again as fast as they naturally waste. It is better to place salt where stock can have free access to it.

HOW TO HAVE FINE ROSES: The rose, because of its beauty and fragrance, is the queen of flowers For success in their cultivation, bushes grown from their own roots should be procured. They should be planted in rich, mellow soil, where the sun shines all the day. Once a year they should be pruned, and a coat of manure put one the ground around them. This treatment causes a large amount of new wood to form, and as the flowers are on this young wood, the bushes consequently blossom profusely. There are several insects that work more or less upon the leaves. Of these the most destructive is a small slug or worm, that eats the varnish that nature has spread upon the upper side of the leaf, causing bushes to look often much as though the fire had singed them. These little enemies should be met and conquered at once, as soon as they make their appearance. A sure remedy is pulverized white hellebore. Put about two ounces into six gallons of water, and with a brush broom give the bushes a sprinkling, bending them so as to wet the leaves on both sides. It may possibly require two or three applications. By this experiment I find it easy to protect several hundred bushes, and have them in blossom—that is my perpetuall blossomers—all the season, until the frosts of autmn intervene.

Three things to govern—Temper, tongue, and conduct.
Three things to think about—Life, death and eternity.

HINTS ON MILKING COWS.—A man who had done his own milking, employed a boy to do it, and he shrunk the milk one-third in two weeks. The owner resumed the milking, and in two weeks got the same as before. Afterwards he set a hired man to milk, and he shrunk the milk ten per cent, in two weeks, and in two weeks more, the owner milking again, as much as before. This man does the work quickly and milks very clean. He closes the forefinger and thumb around the teat high up, and makes a downward motion, tightening the grip and forcing out the milk, then lets go his hold, keeping finger and thumb in a circle, carries up the hand and presses it smartly against the under and closes and pulls down as before, and so repeat until done. The philosophy, if any, is to give as near as may be the same motion that the calf does sucking.

LISLE'S A very pleasant garment to look at, but it is a very bad one to wear. The ruin of millions may be traced to it.

A block of marble, the largest ever quarried in this country, has arrived in New York from San Francisco. It weighs seven tons, and is to form the new basin of a fountain at Central Park It cost $10,000

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the glow and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of the virtues of its use.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt foe taints the organic molecules; the constitution, and finally the tissues, without exciting suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on the favorable occasion, rapidly develops one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, internal organs may be suddenly depleted in the form of heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. But every manifestation of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is invisible, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, in length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilitic Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these old-time maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will run the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Abscesses and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Dyspepsia, Purgation or Inflammation of the Bowels, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

Disenthralled.

J. G. WHITTIER.

He had bowed down to drunkenness;
An abject worshiper;
The pulse of manhood's pride had gone,
Too faint and cold to stir;
And he had given his spirit up
Unto the humblest thrall,
And bowing to the poisoned cup,
He gloried in his fall.

There came a change, the clouds rolled off
And light fell on his brain—
And like the passing of a dream,
That cometh not again.
The shadow of his spirit fled;
He saw the gulf before—
He shuddered at the waste behind,
And was a man once more.

He shook the serpent's folds away,
That gathered round his heart,
As shakes the sturdy forest oak
Its [illegible]nous vine apart;
He stood erect—returning pride
Frew terrible within,
And conscience sat in judgement on
His most familiar sin.

The light of intellect again
Along his pathway shown,
And reason, like a monarch, stood
Upon its golden throne:
The honored and the wise once more
Within his presence came—
And lingered oft on lovely lips
His once forbidden name.

There may be glory in the night
That treadeth nations down—
Wreaths for the crimson warrior—
Pride for the Kingly crown:
But glorious is that triumph hour,
The disenthralled shall find,
When evil passion boweth down
Unto the God-like mind.

A Conjuror's Charms.

Gentle reader, there are such things as charms. Scarce any one now-a-days believes in charms; but the writer of these few lines, a staid and sober man, firmly believes in their existence, and so perhaps will you, when you have read what he has to say.

In a certain village, which, for our present purpose, we shall call Cranthorp, there was an old house which, by common consent, had for many years been set down as haunted. It had a spacious garden, but not cultivated, and rank nettles and weeds occupied the place of the flowers and vegetables of former days; it had handsome rooms, but no footstep passed through them, and thick upon the windows and walls lay the crusted dust; no one would have anything to do with the place, and it would have caused general rejoicing through the town if "The Hermitage" had been pulled down and the garden ploughed up. There were few more superstitious places in England than Cranthrop, and perhaps the existence of this old house, in the midst of the town, helped in no small degree to keep its superstitions up. For years "The Hermitage" stood unoccupied, but at length the day arrived when it was to find a tenant.

The early spring was just beginning to dress the hedgerows in its tender green, and the chill had not quite passed from the April breeze, when there came to "The Spaniard," the best inn in Cranthrop, a little old man, who soon excited the curiosity of the whole town. In figure the stranger was naturally short, and looked still more so from a considerable stoop; he walked leaning somewhat heavily on a gold-headed stick, and his white hair fell down upon his coat, looking almost like driven snow. The strangers luggage was inscribed with the name of "Ambrose," and all that the most diligent and persevering inquiry could make out about him was that he had travelled post from London. There was no lack of trunks; there was no hesitation in paying his bill weekly; and so the host at "The Spaniard" was pleased enough with his guest. But in about a month he looked upon him with very different eyes; the stranger had been seen prowling about "The Hermitage," and from that day forth he was eyed with suspicion. Whether this suspicion would have been disarmed or not in a little time, by the strangers general good behavior, we cannot tell; for in the course of a few days he was guilty of an act which made the landlord of "The Spaniard" wish to get rid of him as quickly as he could.

The stranger purchased "The Hermitage!" Yes, knowing and deliberately he went into the mansion by himself, for no one would go with him. He inspected the rooms; he even made his way up to the roof; he looked out through the dusty windows upon the few panic-stricken inhabitants of the place, who had stopped on seeing a stranger enter the dreaded spot; he had bored into the soil of the garden with his gold-headed cane; all these things he had done, and if the gossips of the place were believed, he had gathered herbs in the garden for making charms; and he had paid for the premises with gold, which some fine morning would be found to be no more than withered leaves.

In course of time the mysterious stranger transferred his residence from "The Spaniard" to "The Hermitage," and several waggon-loads of furniture and books, together with an old woman, apparently a house-keeper, arrived from the metropolis. Now, if ever, there was a favorable opportunity of finding out exactly where the stranger had lived; but greatly to the discomfiture of the Cranthrop public, all that the waggoners knew was, that they had fetched the luggage from a gloomy looking street, the name of which they could not remember. It was unfortunate for Dr. Ambrose that his housekeeper should have that close union of nose and chin would have from time immemorial has been a leading feature in the physiognomy of a witch; and it was further unfortunate that the bystanders caught sight of several complicated brass instruments as they were being unpacked. Now at least there could be no mistake; these were the instruments of his diabolical art: the old woman was a witch, in union with him in his incantations and charms; and the black dog, that was tied to the last waggon, and now fondly licked his master's hand was none other than the stranger's familiar spirit.

For a considerable time Dr. Ambrose's house was closely watched. If a light were seen glimmering through any of the windows late at night, it was duly commented on the following day; if the black dog were seen smelling for a rat amid the weeds of the garden, it was reported that a familiar spirit was searching for the herbs required by its master in his nightly incantations; the only thing that at all shook the popular belief about the stranger was the fact that every Sabbath day he was seen in his place in church.

Weeks rolled on, and the white-haired old man became aware of the light in which he was looked upon. He would not perhaps from choice have wished to be such a terror to his neighbours, or to be so completely isolated from them; but he continued quietly and cheerfully to pursue his own course, trusting to time to disabuse the inhabitants of Cranthrop to their silly thoughts.

As far as outward things were concerned, people were obliged to confess that there was nothing amiss. "The Hermitage" no longer looked the haunted place it appeared before; the garden was now filled with wholesome vegetables and handsome flowers; the doctor's name figured for a very handsome sum in the charities of the neighbourhood; and he had never been detected in any overt act which could be considered a tampering with the Evil One.

Thus matters stood when a very gay wedding took place in Cranthrop. The bride was the only daughter of a wealthy farmer, and the bridegroom was the son of a widow lady who resided in the town. Both were "only children," and, as is too frequently the case, both had been indulged; so they would therefore acknowledge few contradictions to their will.—When these young people were engaged to be married, they seemed to have everything that the heart of man could desire to make them happy; they were young and healthy, and rich and accomplished, and many were the enviers of their lot. In due time the wedding took place.—The children of the Cranthrop school strewed flowers in their path, the church bells rang out their merriest peals, and all went off as the most sanguine could have hoped.

There was only one drawback—the wizard, the witch, and the familiar spirit were all at the wedding. Dr. Ambrose had not seen a country wedding for many years, while his housekeeper had never seen one at all. They were detected lurking in a back pew of the church, and the black dog ran across the churchyard as the wedding party went out.—All who knew of the presence of these unlucky beings shook their heads, and said, "Wait a while, we'll see!"

The honeymoon passed away, and a newly furnished house in Cranthrop received the bride and bridegroom on their return. Visits were exchanged, parties were given, and the whole place was kept quite alive for two or three months; at the end of that time, however, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Packton, for so they were called, became commonplace. In a few months it began to be whispered about that the young couple were not as happy as might be wished, and Mrs. Packton became seriously ill. These unfortunate circumstances, of course, formed the staple of the little town's gossip for a considerable time, and at last it began to be commonly said, that nothing else could have been expected; people did not always mention names, but they said to each other: "You remember who was at the wedding." "You remember what crossed the churchyard." These sayings of the Cranthrop people were not lost upon Mrs. Besom, young Mrs. Packton's godmother, and she determined if possible, to get rid of the spell under which her godchild was placed.—Mrs. Besom was herself a believer in witches and charms; and if by any means the spell which cursed the life of her godchild could be broken, such means must not be left untried.

The first grand point was, of course, to ascertain what her godchild's trouble was; but upon this the latter was entirely silent, and no persuasion could induce her to speak upon the subject. This fairly puzzled Mrs. Besom, and after many vain attempts to discover the canker of her godchild's life, she took the desperate resolution of calling upon the wizard himself, and offering him any sum he might name for exercising his victim.

Mrs. Besom was not the woman to go to sleep over a determination when it was once formed; a very short time, therefore, was allowed to intervene between her making this resolution and putting it in force; and one summer day, at noon, she knocked at the door of "The Hermitage." Noon was the hour which Mrs. Besom chose, because she held that each hour from that to midnight the wizard's energies became stronger and stronger for all purposes of evil, and at that particular time his influence for good, if he wished to exercise them, had most power.

Seated in a large high-backed chair in the dreaded Hermitage, Mrs. Besom first requested that the black dog might be sent out of the room; and having this, as she thought, by a master-stroke, deprived the enemy of a chief ally, she opened fire on Dr. Ambrose; and coming to the point at once, taxed him with having bewitched her godchild. "No! no! do not deny it," said the lady as she heard the commencement of Dr. Ambrose's denial: "It is well known that you are at the bottom of it all, and you have succeeded only too well. Money is no object," said Mrs. Besom, drawing a pocket-book from its hiding place; "undo what you have done, and you can have what you will."

Many were the protests which the white-haired old man made against being supposed to have the power of enchanting or disenchanting; but Mrs. Besom would not leave until he had solemnly promised to do what he could for her godchild. What he could! Yes, this promise was quiet enough; "for assuredly," said she to herself, "he has the power." The next thing to be done was to get the enchanted woman into the sorcerer's presence; for Dr. Ambrose had declared that under no circumstances could he do anything for her unless he saw her, and had an opportunity of putting some questions to her.

The difficulty was to induce Mrs. Packton to go to "The Hermitage," and perhaps she might have gone, had it not been that her god-mother, Mrs. Besom, now for the first time revealed to her the fact of the wizard and witch's presence at her wedding, and the still more solemn one, that the familiar spirit, in the form of the black dog, had been close at hand! So weakened was the young woman from illness, that all this took strong hold of her imagination, and at last she attributed all her sufferings to Dr. Ambrose and his wicked associates; and as a desperate remedy must be applied for a desperate disease, she consented to put herself in the hands of the much-dreaded man.

Meanwhile, the Doctor was sorely perplexed. He had given up practice, and sought for complete retirement in "The Hermitage;" and whether he wished or no, he found himself not only thought to be a wizard, but compelled to act as one. True, he had possessed no small skill in coping with diseases of the body, and had met with success in some difficult mental cases also. If Mrs. Packton's case fell within the range of ordinary instrumentality, he was prepared to do what he could; but powers of sorcery he knew he did not possess. Dr. Ambrose had not been for many years an observer in life in vain, and he hoped, should Mrs. Packton ever really appear, to be able to discover where there were any causes except physical ones, that brought her to her present state.

A month passed away, during which time Mrs. Besom had been hard at work on the possessed woman every day; and at length, one day at noon, the source of all her anxiety presented herself before Dr. Ambrose at "The hermitage." The kind-hearted old man was very much shocked at the appearance she presented; she seemed quite a different being from the young and handsome bride he had seen but a little while before. He begged her to be seated, and seeing how exhausted she was, offered her a glass of wine, and something to eat; but she would neither eat nor drink in his house; how did she know what might be in the cup or dish? A searching glance into his visitor's face soon showed the Doctor what was the true source of her trouble; the body might be affected; indeed, more or less it must be so; but there were lines in that face which were never traced by bodily suffering or disease. The Doctor believed that he had found a clue to the complaint.

"You are not happy," said the wizard.

"Indeed!" said Mrs. Packton, "who told you so."

"I have ways of knowing; you are not happy."

"No, I am not."

"And yet you ought to be; you have all that heart could wish."

"Not all."

"Why, you are young, and rich, and have married the one you loved; what more of this world's things can you desire?"

A half suppressed sigh from the enchanted woman, as the Doctor uttered the last few words, convictions confirmed his convictions that all was not right in Mrs. Packton's domestic life. He knew that she was an only child, and that therefore, in all human probability she had been spoiled, been used to her own way, and had been subject to that self-discipline which is so essential to happiness. He was also aware that her husband was an only child also, and he had pretty nearly the same thoughts about him. "Selfishness," thought he, "is at the foot of all this evil—a want of self-control—a want of moral principle. If I am to disenchant her, I must go to the demon of self.

"Young lady," said Dr. Ambrose, "I can give you some directions which will in all probability accomplish what you desire the most, and restore you to your happiness again. Two things you must promise me. First, you must never use what I give you without first offering a mental prayer to God to bless you in the use of it; secondly, you must promise me, whether it succeed at first or not, to continue the use of it for two months; and I may further add, that the strictest secrecy must be preserved. If you are willing to agree to these conditions, I am willing to do for you what ever lies in my power."

It seemed very strange to Mary Packton that the wizzard should have said anything about prayer to God; but she could not feel otherwise than pleased, for it was a kind of guarantee that the prescriptions of the enchanter could not be so desperately bad; so agreed to the stipulations he had proposed.

Dr. Ambrose hereupon left the room, having intimated that he would be absent about half an hour. Half an hour was not long for a wizzard to prepare such a powerful charm as the present case required; so Mary Packton sat patiently in the arm-chair. Once or twice she was disturbed and freightened by the appearance of the black dog on the window-sill; but her own thoughts occupied her so much that many imaginary fears were kept away. Yes, Mary Packton had many a bitter thought to occupy her mind. All her young dreams of wedded happiness had vanished; the man to whom she had bound herself for life had disappointed her, and was utterly changed from what he had been during their courtship and the first few weeks of their wedded life, and henceforth there remained for her nothing but years of anguish and distress. That would be a precious charm indeed which restore her husband's love, and make him anything like what he had been before.

While Mary Packton was absorbed in these reflections, the door opened, and Dr. Ambrose made his appearance. He had in his hands a small box, which was carefully sealed up, and a letter which contained the spell that was to operate with such wonderful effect. Putting them into his visitor's hands, he told her she would find full directions for their use when she arrived at home, and opened both the paper and the box.

"Remember the conditions," said the Dr. "Come again this day two months, if we are both alive. Farewell!" and, before Mary Packton could thank him, or make any observation he had left the room.

That evening Henry Packton was going out to see his mother, and so his wife determined to take advantage of the opportunity to examine the paper and the box. Had they come to her under any ordinary circumstances, she would have opened them on her way home; but she was half freightened, and was rather glad to defer it for awhile.

Evening came, and Henry Packton went out; and now for the opening of the charm! With trembling hands the young wife broke the large seal, and unfolded the long sheet of paper, which contained several lines of what appeared the most perfect nonsense. Over these she pored for a considerable time, and, from the disposition of the letters, she could not but think that they formed words, if only she could read them; but who was to supply the key! Then she opened the box, which was filled with diamond-shaped lozengers, and which contained also a slip of paper, which to her great delight was the key to the characters she had just been puzzling over in vain. It contained an alphabet, in two rows, and the directions simply were: "Substitute the bottom for the top, and where there is an italic, the top for the bottom!" This she at once proceeded to do, and the following combination of letters produced the following result:—

"Consider whether the blame which thou wouldest lay upon another be not, to a great degree, chargeable upon thyself."

"Remember that others are imperfect as well as thou."

"Consult another's happiness before thine own."

"Utter no word of unkindness, answer none."

"Give double love for double hate."

"Spend thy strength for God."

Had such good advice as this come to Mary Packton in more common guise, like many another, she might have rejected it; but she had promised the reputed wizard faithfully to abide by his directions, and she felt herself under an obligation to do so, whether she would or no. It was long before Henry Packton came home, and she had ample time to think over the lines which lay before her; and that thought was not without its good effect. As she pondered over the first sentence, and faithfully examined her past wedded life, she found that, short as it had been, she had been sadly deficient in the duties of a wife; that she had been selfish and petulant and uneven in her temper; and her conscience told her that much of the misery she had endured was to be laid upon herself.

For two long months did Mary Packton battle with herself, and earnestly seek for higher strength than her own, so when Henry Packton found that his wife did not scold him on every opportunity, but made allowances for him, he kept from many a thing which he knew she did not like; by the end of that time the charm had begun to work on Henry Packton as as well as on his wife; cheerfulness once more came back to their dwelling, and it almost seemed as though the honeymoon had commenced afresh.

Space would fail us if we were to try to chronicle all the young wife's struggles, all her failures, and the minute particulars in which she had to work out the Doctor's charm. Suffice it to say, she succeeded at the last; and at the end of the two months reappeared before the Dr. with a very different face from that which she had when she came to consult with him first.

"My dear young lady," said Doctor Ambrose, "do not thank me, but thank the One who has given you strength to fulfil Scriptural precepts, and who has vouchsafed a blessing on your efforts. Considering how much both you and your husband, as only children, had been indulged, and knowing as much of human nature as I do, you need not be surprised that I guessed, with tolerable accuracy, the source of your trouble. Only one reward I ask, and that is, that you will disabuse my worthy neighbors of the idea that I deal in witchcraft. I should like to live amongst them, and do them good in those diseases, in the treatment of which I have passed my life; but I have no access to them, owing to the absurd notions which I find they entertain of me, of my housekeeper, and even of my dog."

"But tell me before I go," said Mary Packton, "what was the use of those diamond shaped lozengers, which seemed certainly to have a wonderful effect?"

"When Athenadorus, the philosopher, went to take his leave of Augustus Cæsar, he left him this rule: 'O Cæsar, remember that when thou art angry thou neither speakest nor doest aught till thou has repeated over distinctly the Greek alphabet.' 'I took a hint,' said Dr. Ambrose, 'from him, and gave you those lozenges, with directions to let one melt in your mouth before you answered, when you were angry, to give you time for reflection, and for your passion to cool down. There is no harm, I hope, in such natural magic as that.'"

A CANDLE TO BURN ALL NIGHT.—When as a case of sickness, a dull light is wished, or when matches are mislaid, put powered salt on the candle till it reaches the black part of the wick. In this way a mild and steady light may be kept through the night by a small piece of candle.

TO PRESERVE CLOTHES PINS.—Clothes pins boiled a few moments and quickly dried, to be used twice a month, become more flexible and durable. Clothes lines will last longer and keep in better order for washday service, if occasionally treated in the same way.

SMOKY LAMPS.—Coal oil lamps that are subject to smoking may be improved by putting from two to three table-spoons of coarse salt in them. It will make the light more brilliant and clear, and keep the wick, besides the prevention of smoke.

FANCY CHOIRS.—What is a fancy choir? A fancy choir consists of four singers.—The soprano is a second-rate Prima donna in the opera, who goes into the organ loft on Sunday morning, fresh from the elevating and sanctifying influence of the green room. The contralto is also a "professional?" Like the others, she sings for hair only, and has no more interest in the services in which she participates, than one of the pipes of the organ. The tenor is a gay young fellow, whose voice is not yet ruined by the dissipated life he leads. It may be good for five years to come, unless he should become a confirmed drunkard before that time has expired, which is by no means impossible. The basso is a German, sneaky enough in his way, but as full of infidel ideas as his magnificent voice is of music. These four persons cause together each Sunday to carry out the scriptural [illegible] bee.

It gives us great pleasure to announce that Mr. J. A. Roseborough is about commencing business in staple and fancy Dry Goods, in Lundy's old stand, No. 3 Market block, of which he will give particulars next week. We wish him success. Look out for advertisement next week.

We have no intention of entering into a bandying of words with a certain Norwood correspondent of the Review. Any one who will continue to assert as a fact what he does not and cannot know—even after the contrary is affirmed, is too contemptible to be worthy of even a passing notice.

A man named Cookson was sent to Jail on Saturday for stealing ready-made clothing from Mr. Bradburn's store. He was, it appears, doing some painting in the store, and had thus an opportunity of purloining some articles, which he did not hesitate to do; being caught and brought before the Mayor he was committed to take his trial.

In the celebrated Guibord case in reference to forbiding the burial of the body of Guibord in the Roman Catholic burying-ground, because he had previous to his decease, acted contrary to the teachings of that church, has just been decided in favor of the action taken by the church. It is said that an appeal will be made to the Privy Council. All the dead do not "forgotten lie."

Politics run to a high pitch in Canada at present. Read the last Review and learn the new way of treating political apponents. But then, any means no matter how vile, to injure a political opponent. The impudence of even a boy who has not yet learned how to clean his own face, is grasped at to do something that may, if possible, injure; but in vain. A right course may bring blame, but what of that? The praise of the world worketh death.

Mr. W. Gibbs, of the township of Colborne, met his death by accident, on Tuesday last. While attempting to walk from one mow to another, his foot slipped and he fell into the threshing machine. When Mr. Green, his son-in-law, ran to pull him out, his body was found to be cut in two, and life was extinct within a few minutes after the catastrophe. This melancholy and fatal accident has thrown a gloom over the whole neighborhood.

The New York Council "ring" have determined to bring a legal action against the Times for exposing their corrupt practices, not on the ground of libel, but to eject the proprietor from property purchased by him. That is the way all over, crush the truth by legal proceedings. Mr. Geo. Baptie M. A. Toronto University, and Prince of Wales prize man of Knox College, has been appointed to fill the chair of Chemistry in the medical department of the Victoria University. We congratulate Mr. B. on his present appointment; and say to our young men in like positions as he was, press forward! There is room above yet.

Port Hope is agitating the subject of "Water Works." Mr. Waterous of Brantford, lately attended a public meeting there, and stated the probable cost of such works for Port Hope would be $32,000. The meeting then agreed to recommend the Council to pay a yearly bonus for ten years of $1,000 a year, or about 3 per cent on the outlay—not half so liberal as our people who offer a bonus of 8 per cent. And yet the advantages of Peterboro in regard to obtaining a supply of water, are tenfold those of Port Hope.

The Horticultural Society's show was held on Tuesday. The number of entries was 237—just 10 more than last year. Many of the articles exhibited were superior, but on the whole, the unfavorable season was manifest in all the garden produce, whether of roots, flowers or fruit.

In the root line, Sheriff Hall, Mr, John McLelland and Mr. Barlee, were principal exhibitors, Sheriff Hall showing no less than sixteen varities of potatoes. Mr. McLelland and Mr. Barlee took first prizes for best peck of potatoes.

The following table showing the produce of a row, 12 yards long, of each sort, will be interesting to many of our readers. They were raised by Sheriff Hall and on nearly the same sort of soil.

Early Rose	28 lbs.
King of Earlies	18 "

Climax	29 "

These potatoes were all planted on the 11th of April, and occupied the same space, but some of them were not ripe when dug.

Messrs. Clementi, A. C. Dunlop and D. W. Bumble, each showed some splendid Tomatoes.

Messrs. Edwards and A. C. Dunlop were competitors in corn and pumpkins.

Mr. Giles, Gardner, and Mr. R. A. Brown took prizes for apples, and Mr. Sheriff Hall for crab-apples.

There were some excellent grapes shown by Mr. R. Kingan, W. Dixon and Jas. Best; Mr. Kingan and Mr. Dixon taking first prizes. Mr. Best showed an excellent well flavored grape.

In flowers it will be seen that Miss Ormond, R. Kingan, Rev. V. Clementi, Sheriff Hall, Geo. Barlee, P. Connal, D. W. Dumble and A. W. Kempt, all obtained prizes. The foliage plants exhibited by Mr. Kempt in variety, were particularly noted.

Mr. Giles furnished a large table of House plants in variety, that for variety and beauty would not be easily surpassed in any of the large places.

The number of entries in Ladies' Work was not large, but what was shown was very nice. The same may be said of Fine Arts.

Below is a correct list of prizes awarded.

An additional sum of $375 will also be realised for the Collegate Institute when established, which will bring the expenses of the school down to about $2,400, to be raised by assessment unless additional teachers be employed, which, of course, is contemplated, but $380 are placed in the estimates for that purpose.

Canadian Statesmen.

The doings, and sayings, too, of our statesmen are likely to be handed down to posterity as somewhat extraordinary. Sir John A. McDonald was for years an object of no common interest, because of his habits, and many of his sayings, uttered in jest perhaps, have sunk so deep into minds of younger men who admired him, that generations yet to come may suffer from their influence which we fear will be for evil rather than for good. The means used to retain power will also be left as a legacy to young statesmen to corrupt the body politic for many years to come. During the absence of the Premier of the Dominion, we have been inclined to throw the mantle of forgetfulness over those things, and to hope that perhaps age will bring wisdom and discretion.

John Sandfield, however, has been an apt scholar of the wily Premier. Accustomed to use expletives so long, it is said, that he cannot refrain from the habit, even in the company of men of more certain piety of interlining his discourse with a few choice oaths. During an interview lately held with a deputation from Strathroy, he is reported as having dropped words, fit only to be heard in the slums and back alleys of the cities, not to speak of being uttered by statesmen, whose history is not of a doubtful character on this score.

The Combination press is at great pains to defend Mr. McDonald, and to this end the name of a certain region not famed for being in the higher spheres, has appeared in print oftener than usual during the last few weeks. Would it not be better for them to try and get the old man to reform his words as well as ways, and to be more select in the choice of his language, now that he must feel that the season of dissolution cannot be far distant, whether it be political or physical. John Sandfield is always attentive to the entreaties of friends. Those who help him, he is ready to oblige. Would it not be a noble work for some of his friends to undertake a trip to Toronto, on the mission of getting him to refrain from the use of the language lately attributed him? It cannot be possible that the whole party endorses the language.—Few would believe that they are all dead to the influence of profane words. Some of his admirers are of the class who teach "Swear not at all." A deputation of those gentlemen might so prevail over the old man's better nature, so as to obtain a promise of greater regard to the selection of words hereafter. That they might make a convert of him is doubtful. He is joined to his idols.

But is it not a serious question for the people of the young Dominion that the halls of our legislature be the abodes of men whose words are so calculated to defile the men they may send from time to time to represent them? It is well known that young men too often draw their inspirations from such men as John Sandfield McDonald, who occupy high places—and if the fountain is so defiled that pure words are the exception, well may we fear to advise young men to leave the homes of their youth and innocence, to perchance be defiled by those with whom they come in contact. Surely the people of Canada are not blind to such things.

FAST TIME.—It is said that the "Goldsmith Maid" did her mile lately in 2:16, but it was fixed at 2:17. Dexter's fastest time being 2:17¼. The spirit of the Times says:—

"If Goldsmith Maid has really beaten Dexter's time her owner is a fortunate man, for if she has done it once the presumption is she can do it again. Some time since it was reported that Mr. Bonner stood ready to give $50,000 for any horse that would beat Dexter's time in a fair, square trot of a mile. The writer is authorized in saying that Mr. Bonner makes a much more liberal offer. This offer is as follows: Dexter, with a road waggon and driver (weighing together 310 pounds) behind him, made a mile in 2.21¼ about a year ago. The waggon was a road-waggon and the horse was driven by Bonner himself. The owner of Dexter says he will give $100,000 for any horse that will fairly beat that time and under the same circumstances. If the owner of the horse that beats that time is not willing to sell his animals, Mr. Bonner will give $10,000 for the pleasure of seeing the feat performed."

The owner of Dexter must have a monomania for fast horses.

The Telescope says that a Mr. John Thompson, a farmer in Carick, left his little boy, five years of age, to watch a gap in a fence while he was drawing grain, the child fell asleep in the gap and the unfortunate man unconsciously drove the load of grain over his son, and killed him instantly.

A Horrible Murder.

KILLED FOR $6,000—HIDING THE DEAD.

One of the most revolting murders that have been recorded in this country was committed in Jamestown, Chatauqua county, N. Y., a few days ago. A Swede named William Buchmann, of Toledo, Ohio, was the victim. It appears that he came to Jamestown last week, having some $6,000 with him, intending to purchase property. He visited the brewery of the Carl Marlow, near the village, and was in the habit of there drinking to excess. Marlow discovered that the stranger had money, indeed Buchmann one night placed in his hands for safe keeping. The next morning the brewer invegled Buchmann into his beer cellar, where he murdered him with a revolver, and during the afternoon burned up the corpse in the furnace. One of Marlow's workmen, a Polander named Bobinski, heard the report of the revolver, and suspecting that something was wrong, watched the proceedings He was shortly after sent by Marlow for wood, which occupied the afternoon, but on his return he found that a great fire had been made under the kettle.

A subsequent examination of the cellar revealed clots of blood and other evidences of the murder, although great efforts had been made to remove them by washing up the entire premises. Bobinski became frightened at the appearance of things, told Marlow he must leave him, and having been paid off, he went and reported to the authorities. It was found that fires had been made in the stove. A diligent search among the ashes discovered several pieces of bone, and a part of the lower arm, containing the elbow socket complete.

Blood was found in the cellar, under the ice house, then passing from that cellar into the east cellar, as if a body had been dragged that way. A barrel or keg was found near the house containing ashes, and upon sifting them, a large quantity of bones were found. Small pieces of human skull, end of finger pince, toe bones, &c., also fifteen human teeth, two very large ones similar make to those worn by Buchmann, three vest buttons, one vest buckle, an eyelet and ring, and boot or shoe nails, a five cent nickle and piece of silver or lead, melted. There was also found in the cellar a large clot of blood containing a portion of brains. Marlow has been arrested, and a Coroner's jury has pronounced him guilty of murder in the first degree.

No Papist Need Apply.

Upon all occasions, early and late, before elections and after elections, George Brown has been the great bugboo held before the Catholic electors of this constituence, and per contra Mr. Sandfield Macdonald vaunted as the great champion of the Church. We have time and again condemned the wicked folly of thus introducing the question of religion into our political contests—shewn that the parties dealing in it and making it their stock in trade have no sympathy whatever with their dupe—that their only object was to use them for the time being, and, when their purpose was served, to cast them aside as they would an old shoe. No doubt Mr. Sandfield McDonald's fidelity to the faith was, in the eyes of a certain class, to doubt their own existence, and we question much whether the evidence we reproduce to-day from his own organ, the Freeholder, of Friday last, will at all open their eyes, for there are none so blind as those who won't see.

Mr. McDonald treats the opinions of the Catholic electors of Ontario upon political matters with contempt, and the course of their representative men he says "he has never thought it worth while to enquire." The claims of the Catholic body to be represented in the Cabinet Councils of the country, he says, "is consummate nonsense"—that to have advocated this or anything of the kind, would have been to have spent a valuable life in an agitation that would have done him no credit—and, in short, that there are not amongst Catholics any man with the education or the ability necessary to such positions—that there are no strong or available men among them—no eligible material—and that to introduce a Catholic into the Government would be to inflict a "Burdensome representation that a sect might be flattered."

During the long contest that was carried on with so much heat for Upper Canadian rights and against Lower Canadian domination, no such insulting language was ever employed towards the English speaking Catholics of this Province—and no one ever dared to insult them by denying to their representative men the qualities of intellect and fitness for public affairs. It has been reserved for Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, a chicken of their own breed, so to revile and defame them, and they are less than men or they will resent it the first opportunity.—Cornwall Gazette.

Cabinet Changes.

The Irish Canadian says:—"Several of our contemporaries have circulated the rumor that Mr. O'Donohoe is locked upon in connexion with changes in the Ontario Cabinet. We are satisfied they are without foundation, and that nothing short of the change that would transfer Sandfield and Co. to the opposition benches, would induce Mr. O'Donhoe to enter the Cabinet. This change effected, nothing would please us better than seeing him there." We take the following from the Peterboro Review:—

"The Ottawa Citizen says, that the name of Mr. John O'Donhoe, Barrister of Toronto, is mentioned in connection with a seat in the Ontario Cabinet. While we are convinced that this is another of the baseless rumors with which the political atmosphere has of late been charged, we deem it our duty to at once state, that were Mr. Sandfield McDonald to give an individual of Mr. O'Donohoe's antecedents a seat in his Cabinet, we earnestly hope that he may at once be kicked out of office, as he would richly deserve to be."

The above proves how sorely poor Carnegie feels the kick by which the Catholics of West Peterboro', under O'Donohoe's exhortation, consigned him for the rest of his days to political oblivion.—Irish Canadian.

The crews that took part in the four oared race above were composed as follows:—

Taylor—Winship, of England.—The late Winship, stroke: Robert Bagnal, Joseph H. Sadler, and James Taylor, bow. Boat built by Jewet, of Dunstan-on-Tyne: colors white and blue: aggregate weight, 598 pounds.

The Renford crew, of England.—Robert Chambers, stroke; Henry Kelley, John Bright, and James Percy, bow. Boat Queen Victoria, built by Jewett of Gateshead-on-Tyne; colours black and white; aggregate weight, 607 pounds.

The Ward Brothers, Cornwall, N. Y.—Henry Ward, stroke: Josh Ward, Gilbert Ward, and Ellis Ward, bow. Boat Dunstan built by Jewett, Dunstan-on-Tyne; aggregate weighe, 627 pounds.

The Coulter-Uiglin Crew, New York and Pittsburgh—Henry Coulter, stroke; John Biglin, Joseph Kays, and Barney Biglin, bow. Boat America, built by Elliott, of Greenpoint; colours red white and blue; aggregate weight, 633 pounds.

The Pittsburgh Crew.—William Scharff, stroke; Frederick Nunn, Nicholas Denmarsh, and Conrad Minehart, bow. Paper boat, built by Waters, Balch & Co., Troy, N. Y.; aggregate weight, 613 pounds.

The Duchess County Crew.—William Stevens, stroke; Charles Burger, Homer Woodin, and Wm. Burger, bow; colours all white; aggregate weight, 685 pounds.

The race was over a course about four miles in length—two miles to the stake boats and return—though we fancy judging from the time made, that upon measurement it would be found to fall short of that distance. The victory of the Ward Brothers has caused quite a pot of money to change hands, the heaviest losers being probably Canadians, who we see by the New York papers were freely laying the odds upon the Taylor-Winship Crew.

The vacancy caused by the death of the late Judge Fairfield, County Judge of Prince Edward, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. R. J. Fitzgerald, of Picton, to that office. The new Judge has the reputation of being a good lawyer, and we believe is naturally and by education qualified for the office. The office is in the gift of Sir John A. Macdonald, who in this instance has [illegible] vacancy. We understand the Member for Prince Edward has had influence for the appointment of Mr. Allison, of Picton, who has been one of Sir John's party. This fact caused in certain quarters comments, upon his application not very complimentary to his consistency or independence. We believe Mr. Allison in every way as well qualified as the lucky candidate, and he had every right to apply for the office if he wanted it. Still we are not sorry that his application, although backed by the Member for the county was rejected. If in which a Reformer's wish for this office was treated by the Tory press, failed to expose the hypocr

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Hasty Consumption Cured by Fellows' Hypophosphites.

Carbonear, Newfoundland, Jan 3, 1871.—Mr. James I. Fellows—Sir: I came to this country in may, 1869 I found a countryman of mine labouring under some affection of the lungs. I recommended your Syrup, tried at the Druggists in Harbor Grace, but they thought I was inventing the name at their expense. However in April, 1870, Mr. Edgar Joyce rapidly wasted away with every system of quick consumption, so that he was unable to walk across the room, having no appetite pains in the left side, nervis system unstrung dry hacking cough, &c. Fortunately I learned that your Syrup could be obained at Mr. Dearin's in St. Johns and immediately procured some (showed one to W.H. Thomson, who ordered a supply from you at once.) Thing was one afternoon; at night he took the prescribed the very results notified in the wrapper. His appetite soon began to return, and a voracious one it was too; the dry hacking cough changed into loose but violent attacks. finally disappearing altogether; pains left his side; his head assumed its natural steadiness, and before he finished ten bottles his health was quite restored, and to-day not a more healthy person is to be found in our streets; and it is the openion of all, that had he not been fortunate in getting your valuable Syrup of Hypophosphites he would be in his grave.

He happened to be in W. H Thomson's the day your first shipment arrived, and took at once four bottles in the Labrador, which he was very anxious to do, but had not occasion to use them himself. No other medicine will be ever perscribe, recommend or give but yours.

I also recommend it to another consumptive but have not heard from him since, as he lives in a distant part of the Island. Hoping this will give you some encouragement.

I remain yours &c.,

D. H. BURRIGE

A Tribute to the Memory of Alice Cary.

BY EVA ALICE.

Departed!—a spirit has flown
To join the fair harpists above—
To unite in the songs of the blest,
And drink from the Fountain of Love!
A sister's bright mission is filled;
And better the earth for her stay;
A loved one has gone to her rest—
Has passed in her glory away!

How sweetly her memory lived
In hundreds of homes in the land
How many the friends who recall
The warm, loving clasp of her hand!
How many the poor who remember
The gifts from the friend who has flown;
And thousands of those who ne'er saw her
How mingle a heart-striken moan.

The birds o'er the seas are returning.
And cheering their songs as of yore;
But our sister's meek prayer we not answered
They'll meet their old friend here no more!
"Her crown was prepared and awaiting"
Where Spring doth ete nal y reign—
In the land that is free from all sorrow—
Richness and anguish and pain!
Where her harp shall still thrill with its music,
Attuned by the Master Divine—
A star 'mid her radiant sister—
Forever and ever to shine!

From her slumbers-bright Angels conveyed her
To wake in the Beautiful Land—
'Mid the scenes of the Heavenly Place—
A guest at the Father's right hand!
How passingly sweet the transaction
From her Earth-home—to Home in the Sky
Surely! "death was robbed of its terror"—
To our sister 'twas Heaven—to die!

The Gallon, the Pint, and the Pound.

For a rough estimate we usually consider that a cubic foot of water weighing 64 pounds, contains 8 standard gallons of 8 pounds each, so that a pint of water is nearly one pound. We were recently corrected in this rough estimate with the assertion that a standard gallon of water weighs nearly 10 pounds, and a pint, therefore, 1¼ pounds. Let us see which of these rough estimates is the nearest to the truth. The standard gallon is 231 cubic inches, which, divided into the cubic foot of 1728 cubic inches, gives 7.4805 for the number of gallons contained in a cubic foot; as now a cubic of water at 390 weighs 62.38 pounds, this number, divided by 7.4805, gives 8,5389 for the weight of a gallon of water, and this again divided by 8, gives 1.0424 pounds for the weight of a pint. It is thus that the estimate of 10 pounds for the gallon of water is totally erroneous, and that if we are to correct the first statement, we may say that a cubic foot contains nearly 7½ gallons, and that the gallon weighs nearly 8½ pounds, and the pint nearly 5 drachms more than 8 pounds.

There are, however, other gallons of different sizes; one of them is what in England is called the imperial gallon; it contains 277 cubic inches, or 46 inches more than the United States standard gallon This is one fifth of 231 inches, and therefore one fifth of 8½, or 1¾ pounds larger, which added, makes 10 pounds for the weight of the water contained in the imperial gallon.

We cannot forbear again calling attention to the confusion of the numberless old measures, and to the beauty of the metrical system, in which the cubic decimeter is the unit of measures of volumes, and the weight of the water contained in the same the unit of weight; all being divided in tenth parts, they agree in their subdivisions, proving a great convenience in calculations of all sorts.

Cadimun Yellow.

Of all the substances which have hither to been used to impart a vivid, handsome yellow to toilet soaps the sulphide of cadmium has given the best satisfaction in practice. The light of the sun does not alter the appearance of the soap colored with it, and only a proportionally small addition of the color to the soap is needed to produce a handsome yellow. This addition is effected by rubbing the cadmium carefully to a very fine state of division with a little oil, and then adding to the soap mass while the latter is continually stirred. The color is not dissolved in the soap, but very finely divided in it. Two shades of the cadmium yellow, one of lemon and the other of orange color, are furnished to the market, and most of it is made at the chemical factory of E Shering, in Berlin, Prussia.

A new swindle just introduced by American sharpers is in motion by the Brantford Expositor as likely to have agood run for a time: A good stranger calls at a private residence and inquires if the family have a sewing machine. If answered in the affirmative and the style of the machine mentioned, the visitor repts that he is agent of the manufacturers, and has been sent out to see that their machines are working satisfactorily. The lady recollects that her machine does not work properly metiones the fact to the agent who proceeds to makes. Presently he starts up, saying: "I have broken some piece of your machine, which I shall be obliged to send to the manufactory. It will cause you a little delay, but your machine will come back as good as new, so you will in the end. "The lady assents, the machine goes to the manufactory, the "agent" disappears but nevers reapears.

To Remove Paint from Stone.—A Correspondent of the London Builder, having to clean a pulpit and cedilia in which the carving and tracy were almost filled up with successive coats of paint, was informed that common washing soda, dissolved in boiling water, and applied hot, would remove it. He says, "I found it at 3 lbs. of soda (lost 2½) to a gallon of water, laid on with a common paint-brush, answers the purpose admirably, softning the paint in a short time, so that it was easily removed with a good stiff scrubing-brush; afterward, on adding a few once of potash to the solution, it softened more readily than with soda only. The stone in both cases was a fine freestone."

A Curious Medical Experiment.—In Russia, not long since, some murders were placed without knowing it, in four beds where four persons had died of the cholera. They din not take the disease. They were then told that they were to sleep in beds where some persons had died of malignant cholera; but the bedsevere, in fact, new, and had not been used as all. Nevertheless, three of them died of the disease within four hours.

To Clean Furniture.—An all cabinet maker says the best preparation for cleaning pictures frames and restoring furniture especially that somewhat marred or scratched, it is a mixture of three parts linseed oil and one part spirits of turpentine. It not only covers the disfigured surface, but restores wood to its original color, and leaves a lustre upon the surface. Put on with a woolen cloth, and when dry rub with woolen.

To Make Calico Transparent and Water-proof.—Take six pints of pale linseed oil, two ounce of sugar of lead, and eight ounces of white resin; the sugar of lead must be ground with small quantity of it, an added to the remainder; the resin should be incorporated with the oil by means of a gentle heat. The composition may then be laid on calico, or and other material by means of a brush.

An Old Maid's Confession.

It is no fun to be a "lone lorn creeter," I can tell you; and I ought to know, for I was oldmaidish at fifteen, and have remaind so up to this time. Now, I am not going to tell you how old I am, for I don't give up yet; but everybody calls me "the old maid," and they all expect me to help them in time of need, as I have no one but myself to do for; but they don't seem to think that I ever need any assistance.

I have tired living with friends, and still have many offers of a home in large families where I could be generally useful, but it don't pay; so I have settled down in a small house of my own; and after furnishing it comfortably, I picked up the first old hat I found in the street, brushed it up, put on it a wide band of crape to cover the holes, and and made it look respectable, and then hung it in my hall (a rather small entry.)

I opened the door wide when I noticed a rough-looking fellow coming up toward the house, and peeped through the curtains to see what effect the hat would have. Boldly marched the man up to the very steps. I had seen him before, and had found him hard to get rid of. Well, if he didn't stop suddenly, when that hat caught his eye! I do believe he thought I was dead, and my husband in mourning for me. You see that crape was a good idea. He left without trying to enter, and I was delighted.—

Shortly after this I secured an old overcoat, pretending I wanted it for carpet-rags; one sleeve was missing, but I hung that side next the wall, right under the hat, and it worked like a charm; and I felt quite secure during the daytime. It was at night I suffered most. I did have an awful fright one stormy winter night. Let me tell you about it.

I had fastened up my doors and windows, and retired to my sleeping room, where I always kept a fire in cold weather. I had put on my night clothes, turned the lamp rather low, and sat toasting my feet in front of the fire while I combed my poor thin locks, now, alas, turning so grey! I had often spent wakeful hours at night wondering what I could, or should do if I found a man concealed in my house. I always looked under the bed and in every closet—had done so this evening, but still kept thinking of robbers.

I had an old-fashioned wash-stand that was not unlike a chest of drawers, so high and narrow. This I had placed across the corner of my room, leaving a space behind it very convenient to throw in my slippers and shoes not in use.

As I faced the fire the stand was in the corner at my right hand, and the lamp behind me, burning, as I said, rather dimly. All at once as I sat there thinking, I chanced to glance at the wash-stand, and on the white wall behind it I could plainly see the shadow of a man's face!

I did not start, I did not scream, but I could not take my eyes from that horrid shade. Such a vallainous face! A thick pug nose, a forehead protruding over the eyes, the lips seemed to fall in, and the chin to stand out long and sharp. Ugh! what a face for a poor lone woman to look upon!

What should I do? take the poker and try to kill him before he could get up from his crouching position behind the washstand? Would he notice if I moved toward the door? How immovable he was—the shadow never changed in the least. If he should chance to gape or sneeze, oh, wouldn't I scream! But screaming could do me no good, and I could not sit there pretending to toast my feet all night.

When would that dreadful man begin the attack? must I show fight first? All this, and much more passed rapidly through my mind as I sat gazing at the shadowed face. He had no beard, the chin was very smooth—was he very young or very old?—I felt very weak—suppose I should faint (I never had,) of course the robber could secure my few valuables in my bureau before I came to. I pressed my hands togetner, fairly pinching my own fingers to see if I was awake, for it might be a dream after all; but no it was reality, and I was at the mercy of that midnight robber. Would he kill me? Every sin I had ever committed stared me in the face. At this moment my pet cat, tired with her long nap and my silence, sprang upon a chair, and with her paw caught a towel lying over the water pitcher and brought it down.

This drew my attention for one moment from the shadow, and when I looked again it was not there! No; could it be that I had been deceived? 'Twas even so; puss had destroyed all trace of a man's face on the wall, for it was that towel piled up carelessly on top of the pitcher that had formed the high forehead, while the mouth of the pitcher made the pug nose which looked so cruel at me. It took me some minutes to convince myself that no man was there; but had I not been too badly frightened to think, I might at first have known that, with the light as it was, no shadow could have been thrown upon the wall unless the man's head had been raised above the stand. I was angry at myself for being so easily deceived, and spent a sleepless night, for my poor nerves were unstrung.

I felt then, and still feel, that woman is not made to live alone; and if some widower, with or without children, wants a housekeeper, I will do my best to make his home comfortable; for one fright as well work one's self to death as be frightened out of their senses in a lonely house.

You may have wondered often times how some dull, uninteresting man came to win a smart, active woman, his superior in every way. This is the secret—they dare not live alone.

Now, gentlemen, pray don't all speak at once.

Terrible Revenge.

On Wednesday a man named Layton arrived at Balton, and put up at the hotel kept by Mr. Pennington. He appeared to be a very quiet man, was riding a splendid horse, and wore a brace of revolvers. He talked very little, and made some casual inquiries about a man named Bedford. On Thursday he was about all day, returned in the evening, and on Friday made arrangements to have his horse taken care of for two or three days; but in a short time he changed his mind, got his horse, fired off and cleaned up his pistols, and said he would take a ride.

While riding along he was overtaken by one of the citizens of Osage, who was going to Marsh Owen's house, where they were threshing wheat. When they reached Owen's house, Layton asked the neighbor, "Is this the road we go?" Layton said "Oh, anywhere; not particular." They rode down the lane near the house, got off their horses and hitched them to the fence and then jumped over into the yard where Bedford was at work. Immediately after crossing the fence Layton began pulling off the glove of his right hand with his teeth, and walking toward the machine which was still at the time.

When within about thirty steps of the thresher, Bedford saw him, turned, and ran. Layton drew his pistol and fired, the first shot dropping him. Bedford arose and started again, when another shot brought him to the ground. Then Layton stepped up to him and put another ball through him as he lay on the ground. Bedford was shot through the thigh, through the bowels from the back to front, and through the chest from back to front, penetrating the lungs. After firing the third shot, and seeing his victim lying helpless before him with the blood running from his mouth, he turned and walked to his horse, mounted, and leisurely cantered to the mouth of the lane, and then walked his horse until out of sight. Layton never spoke a word after crossing the fence, but did his work coolly and deliberately.

It appears that during the war Layton had Bedford in his employ. He trusted him with his family and his honor, which Bedford took advantage of by seducing Layton's wife, for which he had now paid pealty. Layton had been hunting his victim for several years.—Nevada Times.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country as I among all classes, as this mild but effectual purgative Pill. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of the remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such cures are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them here. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anyone. Their sugar coating preserves them always fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously used to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change these complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Ayer's Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels a little unwell, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so wide, and so rapidly upon the confidence of mankind, as this remedy for pulmonary complaints. For many years of severe and unceasing trial, it has risen higher and higher in the esteem of the afflicted, as it has become better known. It possesses a character and power of control over the diseases of the lungs and throat, that has made it a reliable protector against them. Many of the most terrible forms of disease and suffering which, in the days of our children, it is at the same time the most distressing result that can be given for incipient consumption, and has deceptive symptoms of the latter, are easily cured by it. A timely provision against sudden attacks of croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as and are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote to them.

Although world Famous, and it throughout curable, still it is equally so as a household remedy, as it is second to none, have been completely tested, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral, no one can wonder at the confidence we have in its virtues, or at the unbounded praise bestowed upon it by those who have tried it. Many of these have sent us certificates of their cures, which we have not room to publish, but which are in our possession, and may be examined by any one who doubts the power of this remedy to cure the diseases to which it is adapted.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by the use of the Cherry Pectoral, and patients who have been supposed to be in the last stages of consumption have been restored to perfect health by its use. While it is the most reliable remedy we possess for the relief and cure of patients in the early stages of pulmonary disease, it is also the best that can be employed in the more advanced stages of the complaint, to subdue the violence of the cough, and ease the distress of the sufferer.

Consumption, that fatal disease which destroys more victims than all other diseases of a consumptive character, yield to the influence of this remedy, when it can be reached by medicine. Many remarkable cures of this complaint have been made by the Cherry Pectoral, which are publicly known in every section of country. Where the disease has become seated in the system, and has fastened its fangs upon the lungs, this remedy will relieve the patient, and counteract the tendency to decay, when all other medicines fail. That Line Fence.

Old farmer Smith came home in a stiff
From his field the other day,
While his sweet little wife; the pride of his life
At her wheel was spinning away.

And everanon, a gay little song,
With the buzz of her wheel kept time;
And his wrathful brow is clearing now,
Under her cheerful rhyme.

"Come, come little Tark, put away your work
And listen to what I say;
What can I do but quarrel brew
With the man across the way?"

"I've built a fence, but he won't commence,
To lay a single rail;
His cattle get in, and the feed gets thin—
I am tempted to make a sale!"

"Why John, dear John, how you do go on!
I'me afraid it will be as they say,"
"No, no, little wife, I have heard that strife
In a lawer's hand don't pay."

"He is picking a flaw, to drive me to law,
I am told that he said he would;
And you know, long ago, law wronged me so,
I vowed that I never should.

"So what can I do, that I will not rue,
To the man across the way?
"If that's what you want, I can help you haunt
That man with the spectre gray?

"Thirty dollars will do to carry you through,
And then you have gained a neighbor;
It would cost you more to peep in the door
Of a court, and much more labor.

"Just use your good sense, let's build him a fence,
And shame bad acts out of the fellow."
They built up his part, and sent to his heart
Love's dart, where the good thoughts mellow;

That very same night, by the the candle light,
They opened with interest a letter,
Not a word was there, but three greenbacks fair
Said the man was growing better.

Bad Company.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

Nathan Hall owned and carried on an extensive carriage manufactory in Windham. Windham had not been a populous town when Mr. Hall took up his residence there. It was a farming district, fifty miles from the nearest seaport, nestled away among well-wooded hills and crystal lakes. The Grand Trunk Railroad at length opened up this section to easy commercial intercourse with distant markets and in Windham Mr. Hall found and developed one of the best water-powers in the county; and within a few years after his advent the country village had more than doubled in size and importance, and the "Windham Waggon" had become an institution throughout New England. And it came at length that a recomendation from the Windham manufactory was sure to procure for its rightful possessor employment at his trade wherever place for such employment was open; and hence Mr. Hall had the pick of young men who wished to learn the trade; and, altogether the manufactory might be considered a grand social and moral institution.

Of the youth who had come in to learn the trade were George Carpenter and Charles Warren. They were of the same age; both bright, intelligent, active and ambitious, and both possessed excellent mechanical skill and genius. They were almost twenty-one, and in a few months they would become masters of their trade. Within the whole range of characteristics the only difference which Mr. Hall had ever been able to find in there two young men was this: George Carpenter seemed to have little the most dignity and self-respect. So far as truth and honor and uprightness of motive was concerned there could be no choice. Mr. Hall knew them well, for they had boarded with him during their apprenticeship, and were members of his family.

One day—it was an early Autumn—Mr. Hall called the two young men into his office.

"Boys," said he, with a troubled expression upon his kindly face, "you were out last night."

George Carpenter hung his head and seemed ashamed; but Charles Warren at ounce replied,—

"Yes Sir, we were up to the Lake Shore House."

"And you were with the party from the foundry."

"Yes, sir."

"Do you know, my boys, that those men from the foundry do not bear a good name in the community?"

"They are good hearted fellows," ventured Warren.

"And yes," added Mr. Hall, "they are a drinking, carousing set. and their associates are of the same stamp. They seemed to have organized the very worst elements of society into a social band for convival and predatory purposes. If any mischief is done in the town they are looked to as its perpetrators. If the night is made hideous with riot and wrangle, they are known to be the instigators. Last night the hog house of a respectable, quiet farmer was pulled down, and a number of his chickens stolen. Do you know who did this?"

George Carpenter looked up earnestly and spoke quickly.

"Mr. Hall, I assure you that we had nothing to do with that."

"But you saw it done?"

"We saw it done at a distance, sir."

"And it was done by men with whom you were in company. Now listen to me my boys: I do not wish to read a lecture, but I must give you a friendly word of advice and warning. It is an old saying, and it is as true as it is old—'A man is known by the company he keeps.' You are both young,—just ready to step out into active life, to plan and to do for yourselves. The world will judge you; and be sure that the company you keep will influence that judgement to a great extent. At present I say nothing about the influence of companionship upon your own characters, because I believe you mean to seek and maintain the right; but, nevertheless, as a man cannot handle pitch without defiling his hands, so he cannot keep bad companionship without defilement of his character. I do not wish to deprive you of any privilege; but, as your friend, I urge these thoughts upon you. Give the world no occasion through even your choice of associates, to suspect you."

After some further remarks upon the character and refutation of the men engaged at the Foundry and the Forge, the two youths were dismissed to their work.

The weeks went by, and the two apprentices were looking with great anticipations to the day of their freedom. And there were only six days difference. Charles Warren would be twenty-one six days before his companion; and the occasion was close at hand—only three days more.

And what were the plans of the youths for the future? Mr. Hall would hire them,—for they were superior and finished workmen; but they had thought of going West. A man named Skillings had spoken to Mr. Hall concerning help and Warren had been recommended as fit for a foreman. Skillings was about to establish a large manufactory, and the man who went in with him at the start, and remained true and faithful, would be likely to gain an interest in the business.

It was on Sunday afternoon that Charles Warren asked George Carpenter to go with him that evening up to the Lake. The boys from the Foundry were going, and they would have a grand good time. But George shook his head.

"You remember what Mr. Hall said to us, Charley."

"Oh, pshaw! What does it amount to! What harm is there to some of our going out of an evening with the Foundry boys?"

"I cannot say that any harm can come of it; and I cannot be sure that harm may not come," he replied: "but" he added, emphatically, "I know that no harm can come of staying away; so I will not go."

"Goodness me? Have you turned preacher, George? I declare, I never would have thought it."

Carpenter winced beneath his companion's raillery, but was firm in his decision. He had reflected upon the words of their master, and had resolved to accept them as a valuable life lesson.

"So you won't go?"

"I will not, Charley; and I wish you wouldn't go."

"Bad, I shall go; and I have a mind to tell the boys what you think of them, wouldn't they have you the next time they saw you!"

"You can do as you think best, Charley."

Evening came, and Charles Warren went up to the Lake with the men from the foundry while George Carpenter remained at home,

And on that same evening Mr. Skillings called at the house of Mr. Hall. He had wished to see Charles Warren, but as the young man was not in, he talked with Mr. Hall, and with George Carpenter. He seemed to like Carpenter, and Carpenter certainly liked him.

"I wish," said Mr. Hall, after the visiter had gone, "that Skillings wanted two foremen; for in that case there would be room for both you and Charley. He is a good man, and he will do an extensive business. I fore-see a grand opening for Charles, if he is true to his own interest."

It was past midnight when Charles Warren got up to his bed. On the following morning he offered no remarks touching his sports of the previous evening, and george asked no questions.

In the afternoon George was walking home from church in company with Mr. Hall, when they were joined by a friend who asked them if they had heard of the row which occured on the Lake Shore during the previous night.

Neither Mr. Hall nor George had heard of it.

"It seems," says the informant, "that a party of those fellows from the Foundry went up there last evening, and after drinking and carousing on the Shore, they went at their usual pastime of tearing down fences and unhinging barn doors At Jason Lascom's they tore down a sheep-shed, and set fire to a stack of straw in the barnyard. Old Lascom and two of his sons came out to save the straw, and were driven off. By that time a number of the neighbors had been aroused and came hurrying up to lend their assistance to the farmer. The foundry men must have been mad with liquor, for they held their ground until the straw was entirely consumed, in doing which they beat a number of the farmer's friends severely. One of Lascom's sons I understand was nearly killed."

From the depths of his heart George Carpenter as he heard this, was thankful that he was not in their company; and moreover, the lesson which his kind master had sought to impress upon him, was now, more than ever fixed in his mind. When he next saw Charles he asked him how the previous evening had passed; but the latter was not inclined to be communicative, and George did not press the subject.

On monday morning the two young men went at their work One went hopeful and jubilant, looking into the future through lens of rich promise, his heart in tune with the songs of the harvest birds, and his conscience at rest.

The other went in pain and doubt, fearful of even the falling of a leaf, and dreading to look into the future at all, since there was part of that future which he could not bridge over.

Toward the middle of the forenoon the High Sheriff of the County, accompanied by a deputy, entered the shop, and inquired for Chas. Warren. The young man was pointed out. The Sheriff approached with a paper in his hand.

"Charles Warren, I have a warrant for your arrest, on charge of riot, malicious mischief, and—"

"What?" whispered Charles, as the officer hesitated.

"MURDER."

"O, my God!—no!"

"It may not be so bad, young man, yet it is bad enough. You were present on Saturday evening with the crew that burned Lascom's property.

"Never mind the huts now. You were there with the rioters and great mischief was done. Young Lascom, whom your party beat and kicked, is in in a dangerous situation; But we had better say no more here."

Silently and sadly, and pale and quivering, Charles Warren went with the Sheriff. Having reached the street he was assisted into a carriage, and driven over to Rutsfield—the town adjoining—where, with the men from the foundry he was locked up in the county jail. On the following day he, with the others, was taken before a Justice for examination. A physician in attendance upon young Lascom, announced that the patient would probably recover from his injuries; so the charge of murder was suspended. Yet, upon careful investigation the Judge deemed the offence to be of a character so grave as to be entirely beyond his jurisdiction and he required the prisoners to furnish recognizance in a proper sum, for their appearance at the next Supreme Court, failing to furnish which, they would be committed to jail. Mr. Hall was sent for, and he readily furnished the required help for his unfortunate apprentice.

And did Mr. Hall read the youth a lecture on the occasion? No. He saw that the poor fellow was utterly broken and agonized beneath the blow, and he felt sure that the lesson had gone home to his heart—a lesson which had been enforced through an ordeal not yet wholly passed. When Mr. Skillings came to arrange for taking Charles Warren out West with him the youth could not go. He must wait for his trial, and the Court would not be in Session until December. In this emergency the manufacturer turned to George Carpenter. This young man's time would be out shortly, and Mr. Skilling's would like to engage him.

Mr. Hall gave in the few days cheerfully and George went with his new employer—went to prove himself worthy of all confidence—went to receive, ere long, an interest in a thriving growing business, and went to have many men in his employ.

Charles Warren, when his trial came was discharged with a reprimand and a lecture from the Court; and the burden of that lecture was, that in the future he should avoid bad company. In after times he became foreman in the employ of George Carpenter; and if there was one lesson in life which, more than another, they both knew how to impress upon the young men in their care, it was that same lesson of Mr. Hall, and of the Judge; for most vividly had it been presented to them that "a man is known by the company he keeps."

INTEMPERANCE—REMEDY.—Great as was the evil of slavery, there is still another which afflicts us as a people. The combined devastations of war, famine and pestilence have never inflicted such deadly blows upon our national prosperity, have never exacted such ruinous taxes, have never slain so many of our brave youth and maidens, have never brought so much wretchedness and woe and desolation to our homes as the single vice of intemperance. It is, indeed, a giant evil, and one which is almost appaling in its combination of forces alike destructive of present and eternal well-being.

But one of the saddest features of the case is the apathy with which many good men look upon the ravages of this vice. In fact, they altogether refuse to recognize its oft demonstrated enormity, and they will not accept the proof that it is to-day the evil most to be feared in all the land. But there are others whose eyes are opened, and whose ears have been unstopped, and they have hearts to feel, and the question now is, what shall be done to free our nation of this dreadful curse? Train the youth in the principles of total abstinence, labor for the reclamation of the victims of drink, and make and execute laws which will secure the suppression of the beverage sale of intoxicants as thoroughly as thieving and robbery are suppressed. To secure these results, we must have the prayer of the pious, the labors of the philanthropist, the moral instruction of the Sabbath School and the votes of all the good.—Zion Herald.

SPEURGEON ON THE DRINK CURSE.—In his review of "thecourses of London," Mr. Spurgeon says:

"This demon of drink must be fought, for it swallows men by thousands, makes their children paupers, and the the prey of the devil. There should be combined vigorous action among all temperance men for such a control of licenses that the dens of drunkenness should be made far less numerous, to say the least, and if we went in for still severer restrictions, so much the better. We are unmistakably overdone with gin palaces and beer houses; they are thrust at nearly every street-corner; they are multiplied beyond all pretence of demand. Not the public's good, but the publican's good, appear to be the aim of the licensers. Quiet neighbourhoods cannot spring up, because the beer-shop rises simultaneously; or if such a thing should for a few months be seen under heaven as a sober region, universally respectfully, and guiltless of intoxication, the Bacchanalian missionary opens his temple, and converts the population to the common error of drinking ways. It is true the demand for drink creates the supply but it is as surely true the all-surrounding omnipresence of the stimulant suggests and propagates the craving. At any rate no two opinions can exist upon one point, namely that the accursed habit of intoxication lies at the root of the main part of London's poverty, misery, and crime."

The miser lives poor to die rich, and is the jailor of his own house, and the turnkey of his wealth.

The Power of a Word.

A poor woman was being fitted with a pair of shoes one day at the Five Point House of Industry in New York, when the man who attended to her case remarked:

"You would do much better to save the money you spend for liquor, and put it into the savings bank." He thought no more about it; but not long ago the woman came to him and drawing a bank note from her bosom, showed him the certificate for fifty dollars, which she had deposited in it.

"You did good when you gave me that advice," she said, if you never did before."

Such often is the power for good or evil of our most unremembered words.

A young woman passing a saloon saw a young man thrust out by the keeper, and so blind was he with rage that he did not see the lady until she laid her hand on his arm, and asked in a gentle voice what was the matter.

A thunderbolt from a clear sky could not have startled the young man more than did those few words from a motherly heart.

Trembling from head to foot, and very pale, he looked at her for a moment, then said:

"I thought it was my mother's voice It was strangely like it. But she has been dead for many years."

Ah, what a flood of memories these words brought up. A few kind words were spoken, words of hope, and courage, and cheer, that he might still make himself what the mother wished, and then they parted. But the whole current of the young man's life was changed from that moment. In after years she met a noble Christian man, whose life was a blessing to many, and learned from his lips that it was the youth whom her kind words had saved.

Here is a means of good open to all. Then who will be sparing of such good seed, when such glorious harvests may be the result?

A Strong Resemblance.

A young lady and her mischievous brother were sitting together on the front veranda of their father's country residence. It was early evening in midsummer, and they were enjoying the dreamy shadows which were mystically gathering around them. At length, amid their pleasant conversation, and with a sudden burst of rural enthusiasm the young lady exclaimed:—

"Oh, how I love the twilight hour! It is so sweet and refreshing."

"You have expressed my sentiments to the letter," responded her companion. "But, my dear sister," he added, with mock gravity, "can you tell me in what manner the letter l in the word twilight resembles the nose on your sweet face?"

"No, indeed!" she replied, with a certain dignity which she did not feel. "But, no doubt, 'tis a specimen of boyish nonsense."

"Call it hard names; but it nevertheless bears a very strong resemblance, I assure you," was the pleasant response.

"Pray tell me in what respect," she continued, becoming interested in spite of herself. "I am sure I could not solve your conundrum; and our present weather is too oppressive for much mental exterior."

"That is the fact; and taking into consideration, I with pleasure, gratify your feminine curiosity."

"But tell me, first, is it original?"

"Certain it is," he answered proudly. "None can dispute my rightful authorship of this my darling enigma."

"Proceed, then, if you please."

"The solution is simply this," said the ingenious brother, still assuming an air of mock dignity: Because the letter l poor thing! in the word twilight, has its location between two eyes.

As he gave this very conclusive explanation there was a merry sparkle in his own dark eyes. His less inventive sister, however, did not notice it. But after giving due thought to the simple word in question, a perceptible smile gathered around her rosy lips; and she was forced to acknowledge to herself that between the two similes there was indeed a very strong resemblance.

A BOGUS CANCER-CURE.—The "new South American remedy for cancer," which so many of the papers of late have been advertising for nothing, proves to be, what the mere knowing ones suspected from the first, a fraud. It was a clever idea to attribute its discovery to an Indian woman of Quito, who sought to destroy instead of to save the life of her husband by the use of the plant. It was another clever idea to procure a sort of official recognition of the "remedy" at Washington, and to its discovery telegraphed thence all over the country; and it was the cleverest of all to inlist the editorial columns of papers like the New York Tribune in its behalf. So much ability exerted in the ordinary lines of humbug would have made the adventurer a successful politician or showman. But the medical profession which would be the first to welcome any real discovery of a cancer-cure, are forced to pronounce the claim in question quite unproven The new cancer-cure" fails to cure cancer It must go on record, with the Cardiff Giant, as another wicked humbug.

A CHINESE WILL.—A Chineman died leaving his property to his three sons, as follows: To Fum-Hum, his eldest, one half thereof; Nu-Pin, his second son, one-third thereof; and to Ding-Bat his youngest, one-ninth thereof. When the property was inventoried it was found to consist of nothing more nor less than seventeen elephants; and it puzzled these three heirs to decide to divide how to divide the property according to the term of the will without chopping up the seventeen elephants, and thereby seriously impair their value.

Finally they applied to a wise neighbor Sum-Hunk, for advice. Sum-Hunk had an elephant of own. He drove it into the yard with the seventeen and said; "Now we will suppose that your father had left these eighteen elephants Fun Hum took his nine elephants and went his way. "Now Nu-Pin," said the wise man, take and get." So Nu-Pin took his elephants and travelled. "Now Ding-Bat," said the wise man, "take your ninth and begone." So Ding-Bat took his two elephants and absquatulated. Then Sum-Punk took his own elephant and drove home again. Query: Was the property divided according to the will?

BOIL FELON.—As soon as the disease is felt put directly over the spot a fly blister, about the size of your thumb nail, and let it remain for six hours, at the expiration of which time, directly under the surface of the blister, may be seen the felon, which can instantly be taken out with the point of a needle or a lancet.

Editorial Items.

LITERARY AND ELOCUTIONARY ENTERTAINMENT.—Miss Eliza Silsby, from Scotland, will give a Literary Entertainment, on Monday evening in the Music Hall, we believe. She is highly spoken of.

THE OTONABEE BRIDGE:—We believe nothing definite has yet been done towards erecting this bridge. The Committee meet to-day at three o'clock, after which, perhaps, they may be able to report progress.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.—The question of the division of the public debt between Ontario and Quebec remains in the same position as before. No new action appears to have been taken by Sir Francis Hincks. The settlement, according to present appearance, will be indefinitely postponed.

NOTICE:—The new Firm and new business since the dissolution of Ferguson & Elder, now Macdonald & Elder, great alterations and improvements have been made both to Store and Stock. The second floor is laid out out for Tailoring, and they are fully stocked in every department. We wish the new firm every success.

IN THEIR LAST THROES:—The hungry office seekers of town are in great excitement as to who will receive the appointment of Postmaster here. Resignation is talked of freely, and already, we understand, parties have proceeded to Ottawa to apply in person either for themselves, or for their friends. Excitement is very great in certain circles. Already excise officer has been decided, we hear, in favor of Mr. H. C. Rogers, as soon as Mr. White resigns which is expected daily, if not already, and merely waiting the appointment of a successor. The Registry office too, is a matter of deep concern to a few, but the bait is not so near being within their grasp as they would wish. How cruel to be waiting at the door of a friend enquiring if he is not yet departed. Gentlemen, have more decency and await patiently the natural demise of the present respected office holders. Surely the present Government must be in their last throes, when their friends are so anxious to get hold of the household effects—would not a little more respect for the present occupants of office be more in accordance with common decency? but then, hang it—there's the office—dead or alive—there's the office. How patriotic the patriots are when offices are to be filled! a day or two, gentlemen, a day or two, if you can wait, will settle the matter. In the meantime, gentlemen, pray for long life and prosperity to the Postmaster and Registrar, if you can. Try it.

CHEESE:—Mr. Robert Jackson, of Otonabee, left here yesterday for England, taking with him ten tons of cheese made at the Otonabee Union Cheese Factory. Mr. Jackson bought the lot, we believe, and takes them home with him on speculation. We wish him a pleasant voyage to his native country and safe back again, and trust that he may succeed in realizing sufficient profit to induce him to ship direct next year, and thus open a ready market for cheese makers, without depending on "rings" in the cheese trade as in other trades.

PRESENTATION.—On the evening of the 12th of september, Miss Manning was the recepient of a handsome present, in the form of a workbox, from the pupils of her Sabbath School class, on being about to remove from this locality. She was beloved and respected by all, was a careful and efficient teacher, and her loss to the Sabbath School will not be easily made up. The best wishes of all her pupils and fellow teachers accompany her in her new undertaking, and hope that the success which signallized her as a teacher, may attend her through life.—COM.

THE WELLAND CANAL.—The Toronto Telegraph has, during the past week, published a series of letters from its special correspondent, showing that the Welland canal has been allowed to fall into a shameful state by the carelessness and mismanagement of the superintendent, Mr. Samuel D. Woodruff, whose dismissal is called for by the Telegraph. If the organ would but lay the blame on the right parties, it is McDonald Cartier & Co., that ought to be dismissed. Why do they not compel Woodruff to his duty if he is delinquent. The real matter is, the government which the Telegraph so strongly supports has neglected the Welland Canal until it has almost gone to ruin, and they seek to sacrifice Woodruff to save themselves.

New York City has been the scene of a huge series of swindles by a "Ring" in the corporation. Millions of dollars have been paid to members of the "ring" and their friends, so that in a year or two they have become immensely rich. Matters at last have come to a crisis. Mayor Hall and the city corporation are not of one mind, and, in consequence, Comptroller Connelly has been asked to resign. This he refused, and in consequence, Mayor Hall suspended him, as far as he was able. Connelly disregards Mayor Hall's suspension edict, and barricades himself in his office to prevent being ejected by force.—All work in the city is stopped, as the Mayor refuses to sign warrants for payment, and thus over 4,000 men are thrown out of employment at present. The contest has assumed a semi-political aspect—the Democrats taking one side, and the Republicans the other side. In the meantime crowds of citizens surround the public offices awaiting results:

In the New York post office, also, there are extensive defalcations; and at Washington, J. Ledgard Hodger, Army Paymaster, shews a deficit of $471,000, with only the power to pay $50,000; and the end of these things is not yet, perhaps.

RUMORED PLANS OF THE COALITIONISTS.—It is hinted in secret circles that all old officials are to be pensioned off and new appointments made as soon as possible, lest the change awaited on the assembling of parliament might leave an office at the disposal of a Reform Government. To this end hungry office seekers in this County are anxiously urging John A. and John S. to act promptly. These are pure creatures whose love for their leaders induced them to sacrifice themselves for their country's good, but now long for the demise or removal of old public officers: as the salvation of Ontario, and of Peterboro in particular, depends on their getting the appointments and drawing the salaries. The Post Office, the Registeries, (for the division is still spoken of) and excise would go to ruin, of course, unless manipulated by patriots of the Combination stripe. How disinterested the Sandfield clique are! only let them have the salaries and all is right. We advise them to read their own expose of Welland Canal management under Coalition rule, and the country will dread any more cormorants being appointed.

Under the heading "Grit Morality" a few of the Government organs are trying to turn their own shame to the account of the "Grits." Our readers will remember how last year the then member for the West Riding of this County, by pretending to give a subscription of $36 to the Agricultural Society, (which was after repaid him, and which he declared he never expected to lose) succeeding in obtaining over $400, we believe, more than the law anticipated he should receive—to obtain this sum he had to set forth on oath that he had $135 in members subscriptions, while his books showed only 60 members, hence he had only about $69 on hand. The Globe styled this a swindle, to which the Oshawa Vindicator says:—

"The Globe is sometimes truthful in spite of itself. Yesterday it narrated how by cooked figures the West Riding of Peterboro' Agricultural Society had swindled the Government out of $400. says these people think it not wrong to steal from the Government, and draws the moral, 'like people, like representatives.' We agree. The Globe has evidently forgotten that West Peterboro' is a Clear Grit constituency, and has elected a Clear Grit representative."

This is a specimen of Combination honesty. The Vindicator seems to forget that the West Riding of Peterboro' was so long in the hands of the Combinationists that the leaders became demoralized, and taking a lesson from head-quarters were ready to indulge in "strange" returns, so long as the Combination government would permit them to go unnoticed. The Vindicator should also remember that whatever wrong was done, was done by the late member of the Riding who boasts of his long services for John Sandfield. It was while the West Riding was under the wing of the Combination the wrong was done. And it was done also by a thick and thin supporter of John Sandfield. It was endorsed only by Tories, and condemned only by such men as Mr. John Walton, or Mr. Sanderson—life-long Reformers. The Combinationists were willing to endorse "money making" whether obtained by "hook or by crook," but especially as this came by "crook" it was all right: Strong supporters of the Combination declaring that "it was no wrong to take money from the Government" no matter how obtained.

Reformers sought to rid the riding of the stain of being represented by such men, and succeeded; and we fondly trust that during their tenure of office no such act shall stain their constituency as did that of the Combinationists last year.

How is This?

It is stated on good authority that John Sandfield McDonald has been trying how the sweets of office might effect John O'Donohoe, of Toronto, and that to the same end he has offered him the County Attorneyship of York, if he will but come to the aid of the sinking Combination ship. Oh! whither is the Country drifting! ejaculates the Review. That detested O'Donohoe, that rather than see him elected I would suffer the loss of all things; and yet John Sandfield offers him a County Attorneyship. Of course if John Sandfield should take him into the Cabinet, or give him an office, the Review would squeak and greet a bit, but after a while he too would say all right to retain the sweets of office, John; yes, John, you may swear and turn up your nose, and send Strathroy to Pondemonium, and further too, John, only retain office till you can help me.

During the last election the Combinationists made a howl of terror at the idea of voting for a Catholic. It was all right to take catholic votes, but to vote for one was a mortal sin. Now John Sandfield, as a matter of expediency, seeks to buy the very man the combinationists hounded through this County as a fenian, and if John Sandfield should succeed in winning his prize, which we don't fear, the same party would laud Sandfield as a master diplomatist. The Combinationists bribe, purchase, sell, persecute to the death, slander, defame, belie, belittle, and do every mean thing under the sun to gain their end, and the hangers-on cry, all right; all right, if we can but retain office.

In the County of Prince Edwards, John Sandfield has just appointed R. J. Fitzgerald Esq., County Court Judge. Mr. Fitzerald is a Roman Catholic, a respectable man, it is said; but just think of the howl that would be made from one end of Ontario to another if a reform Government had appointed a Catholic to a judgeship. If a Catholic in their opinion is not worthy of a vote how can he be worthy of a judgeship? But John Sandfield is prepared to do anything to retain office, and his supporters are ready to aid him in any thing he may do. We raise no objection to the appointment of Mr. Fitzgerald, but only refer to the acts of John Sandfield, and to the inconsistency of his supporters. Catholics were all right while they voted the Combination ticket, but so soon as they became disgusted with John Sandfield & Co. and voted the contrary ticket, they were fenians, dangerous persons, enemies of the country, unworthy of support or confidence, and all at once combinationists became as frenzied as the man who carried his rifle to shoot the stumps on the road side, and in the gardens and fields, believing every pine stump in the country to be a live fenian. What a strange people in this Canada of ours!

Where did he get his Figures?

The Review of last week says: "Look at our charming little sister municipality of Ashburnham, where, this year, they will have a rate of eighteen mills, if not two cents, besides their statute labor," &c.

Where did the editor get his figures? The rate for the year 1871, in the Village of Ashburnham, as now fixed by By-law, is one cent in the dollar—not "eighteen mills" as the Review puts it, "besides statute labor tax." The trifling error of eight mills in the dollar, however, is not much when there is an object to serve. Of course, the one cent does not include the statute labor, which is additional. The rate, of course, is high enough without a misrepresentation of eight mills in the dollar, which is equivalent to an error of eighty per cent on the whole taxes.

In the matter of statute labor, the council of Ashburnham have the power, and they should exercise it so as to lessen the burden in that respect. The amount for statute labor is no inconsiderable item, and there can be no doubt in the mind of the ratepayers of the village, that to lessen the amount would be acceptable to all. In other respects the rate of the village is as low as in town—but if the town there is no statute labour tax in addition to the property tax.

In the County, property is assessed very much below what the statute contemplates. In all the townships the equalized value is not over one-fourth the real value. In Otonabee the equalized value is $10 per acre; in Smith the equalized value is $9 per acre; N'Monaghan it is $10, and so with all the Municipalities except Ashburnham, in which, although below its real value, the assessment is not as wide of the mark as in the Townships. If therefore, the rate per dollar appears high in the townships, the rate per acre is very low—and hence, compared with the town there is not such a difference after all.

As far as the portions of Smith and Monaghan near the town are concerned, there can be no doubt but that the owners thereof would be better annexed to the town. The Township assessors justly assess the property near the town high—very high compared with other portions at the townships, and in consequence they have higher rates to pay than if annexed to the town—when they calculate statute labour tax additional to other taxes.

In the matter of schools the people of the park lots will be compelled to seek a union with the town, in order to get their children admitted to the town schools. At present, the Board need not admit one child except those who have a legal right to attend, and we understand the members of the Board are determined to carry out the law to the letter in this respect: and for doing so they cannot be blamed. The Town has no right to build school houses and pay teachers for the people of the townships who will not pay a cent of the expenses.

In sending to the high school we believe the Board has fixed the fees for outsiders at 50 cents a month. To remain outside therefore and send children to the school, entails an additional tax per child of $2.50 a year, which for a family of two or three children attending school raises their taxes far above what they would have to pay if joined to the town. When they consider, too, that a few years more and they must be a part of the town of necessity, they must see that even at present they would be better off joined to the town at once.

Obituary.

Death has again visited our borders, calling away one of the pioneers of the neighborhood, Mr. John Campbell, Sen., who after a few hours illness passed peaceably away on the 8th inst., at his residence, North Monaghan, at the age of 74. The decease obtained a fair share of information in youth, which he steadily augmented through the whole of his life, more especially in the last 25 years, during which he had withdrawn from active business.

Being naturally endowed with a vigorous mind and an insatiable desire for knowledge, he devoted his abundant leisure time entirely to reading and meditation. Though not ignoring general literature in his reading, yet theology was the study of his daily life. His preference was given to the old authors in Divinity, Ethics and Biblical criticism generally; but a pleasant with the numerous works of Henry, Scott, Erskine, Doddridge, Harvey, Baxter, McCheyne, &c., also Scougeon, Boner, Guthrie, Krummacher, late writers interested him continually. However, the author whose works elicited his warmest sympathy and appreciation was Bunyan, scarcely a day passed during a score of years without his having read some portion of this author's inimitable writings. "How I shall enjoy a talk with John Bunyan in heaven" he once remarked to a friend in his rapturous delight. As might be informed from his preference for the above works, his mind was strongly impressed with the truth of those doctrines termed Calvinism. Having probed the subject to its deepest depths, that whole system appeared to him an infinitely grand plan, worthy of its great Author—the Deity. The clearness of his views on some points where others falter and stumble, was only equalled by their force and decision. To those who did not understand these doctrines his zeal for them was an explicable mystery.

Nor was his belief a beautiful but lifeless system. It bore its legitimate fruit in an usually contented life amid the many trials incidental to humanity in this vale of tears, and swept his whole nature in a more than Platonic serenity or music for titude.

Many, both young and old, will miss his friendly greeting and mature counsel,—for above all he was mighty in the Scriptures, to instruct, caution or comfort those needing advice—many also live to thank him for right views of the most important matters bearing on human life and destiny.

Having a retentive memory, and owing to his varied reading he had become familiar with the chief of subjects of polemical theology, consequently his opinion was not to be trifled with on any controverted point—indeed, he was considered a sort of guage of the soundness or heterodoxy of a sermon, or system.

Among his defects may be noticed perhaps the most prominent—want of forbearance towards those differing from him on doctrinal matters especially the Armenian views.

Six of the family remain to mourn his loss, the youngest of whom Mr. Isaac Campbell, of the Burleigh Mission, is prosecuting his studies for the Ministry.—Com.

Miscellaneous Items.

HORRIBLE MURDER.—Mrs. Margaret Finley, living near Walash, Ind., murdered her three children yesterday afternoon.—She took her baby by the feet and beat its brains on a stone. She cut the throats of the two eldest children, aged 8 and 9 years respectively. The woman was arrested and lodged in jail yesterday. She is a widow, her husband having died last winter, she seem perfectly sane and says she killed the children to get rid of them.

AN INJUNCTION.—Judge Westmore issued an injunction against Mr. Declarats of the Canadian Illustrated News, and agents at St. John, requiring them under the penalty of £1,000 not to sell the paper containing the photographs of the Lieutenant-governor, copyrighted by Robert Roberts of St John. These pictures were sent to Montreal to be prepared for the use of the Telegraph and Journal of St. John, and were used by the Illustrated News before the plate was received by the proprietors of the Telegraph.

SHOCKING AND FATAL ACCIDENT.—The Guelph 'Advertiser, records an accident which instantaneously hurried to his grave one of its townsmen, James Baker, the particulars are these: James Baker and W. Holiday were just returning from a shooting excursion on Wednesday evening, and as their waggon arrived opposite Pound Creek, Baker got out and was taking his gun out also, when something struck the hammer the charge was lodged in his right breast, causing immediate death.

BLOODY AFFRAY NEAR ST. MARYS.—The Stratford "Herald" of the 30th., says that on the previous evening a man named Thomas Murry was brutally assulted with a scythe by one Wm. Haney. The parties reside about one mile from St. Marys, and got into a dispute, when Haney drew a scythe which he was using and struck his opponent with it over the head and face, hacking and wounding him in a fearful manner. The wounded is in a precarious condition. The man Heney was arrested the same evening in St. Marys and place in custody.

A SHOOTING AFFRAY.—The Brighton "Ensign" gives us an account of a fracas that occurred in Campbellford last Saturday evening, which has repercussions over the country. Some young larks were out late enjoying an oyster supper, seasoned with strong drink, and when returning home met a man named Norlolk, who was proceeding peacefully along his way. They commenced crowding and shoving against him, from which he repeatedly asked them to desist. At last he drew a revolver, which he had been shooting fish with in the river, and said he would use it in case of necessity. They than opened a way for him to pass, but immediately followed and tried to take the pistle from him. He at last fired, the ball entering the body of Stewart Cox.—Norlolk gave himself up. His firing was in self-defence, as they had hold of him at the time. We do not thank he can be punished for the act.

Our reader doubtless remember the many attempts—sorry attempts at best—at wit, indulged by the Ministerial press and Government croakers, concerning Mr. McKellar's farming operations. His objection to certain proceedings in the House were made the subjects for homely on his fall ploughing and potato patch, while his unwillingness to sanction delay in legislation was construed into a nervous desire to get back to his plough. We agree with the London Advertiser that Mr. Mckellar has the laugh entirely on his side now by showing a yield for this season of 10 bushels of first-class wheat to the acre. Such men as A. McKellar are an honor to any constituency. Intelligent and independent in the House, his voice is always heard in behalf of justice and economy, while at home he finds favour in the estimation of his constituents by quietly pursuring his favorite occupation. Countrymen like he quits the exciting scenes of debate in the national legislature to indulge in the more congenial pastimes of a rural life. All honor to our honest famer representative from Bothwell, and may Ontario be blessed with many more like him.—Belleville Ontario.

PORT HOPE HAS HAD A BIG FIRE:—The Guide says:—

The total loss by this fire will amount to over $100,000. Pollock's furniture was insured for $750; and Mr. Butterfield had $8,000 insurance in the Western; Mr. H. C. Rassell was insured for only $1,000, in the Imperial; Mr. Coots was not insured and lost at least $800. Mr. Frazer, owner of the eastern building destroyed, had it insured in the Royal for $2,000; and the wings amount on the Bank building, which is greatly damaged. Judge Smith of Lindsay, who owns the building occupied by Mr. Coots, is supposed to have about $2,000 insurance in the British American. Mrs. Gregory, who occupies part of the Bank building as a residence, had a considerable damage done to her furniture. Insured in the Queen for $300. The damage done to other buildings in the neighborhood will also amount to a considerable sum, not yet estimated.

Three fires on one morning in Port Hope is rather an uncommon occurrence. It happened on Tuesday. First came the fire on Cavan Street, then on John Street, at Stevenson's Tin Shop, occasioned by flying embers from the first. This was speedily quelled. The third was caused in the same manner by a spark falling in the straw at Mr. Soper's stable, on Queen Street.

The Moits Again.

Another case of attempted usurpation on the part of the harmless Metis is reported from Point du Chene. A number of settlers from Ontario were called upon by a deputation of French Half-breeds, who informed them that their presence would not be tolerated in that portion of the Province, and that if they were not gone by the end of the week (19th inst.) forcible means would be taken to eject them. The settlers came to town and applied to Attorney-General Clarke for advice. That gentleman told them that in his opinion, the first occupier was entitled to the land, and referred them to the Government. The men, however, were not particularly anxious to be aligned for Her Honor for trembling him with such trifling things, and returned to their claims, with the avowed intention of keeping them at all hazards. How long is this sort of thing to last? We are no advocates of violence, but the continued trampling rights of the immigrant by the Metis, by and with the consent and advice of their special champion, the Governor, may result in that which we so much dread, and who will be to blame?

The most favorable reports reach us regarding the crops in this Province. They may be said to be out of danger, as the wheat crop is nearly cut, and some of it stacked and housed. In some of the parishes the produce will be below the average, but taken as a whole there is a fair crop all over. what we consider an average here would be thought a heavy yield in other places. In mostly all the parishes on the Assiniboine it is considered wheat will yield from 20 to 25 bushels to the acre, although in Poplar Point and Portage la Prairie the produce will far exceed that. Owing to the dryness of the climate, farmers scarcely ever know of such a thing as wheat growing in the stook or stack, altho' the stacks remain out for one two or three years without thatch or covering. There is a good crop of barley in the country, and oats are doing well. Potatoes in this Province beat the Dominion for size, quantity and yield. In view of the influx of immigrants, it is gratifying to know that no scarcity of provisions need be apprehended, as a turn out of the harvest, and the increased quantities sown this year, will not necessitate immigrants taking their provisions from Minnesota, as we believe here, plenty will be found in the country to supply the consumption. From information derived from a gentleman, an old settler, who called at our office the other day, we are justified in stating that there will be upwards of one million of bushels of wheat in the country this fall, exclusive of other cereals and vegetables.

The Insulting Premier.

Among the many bad traits of character of the Attorney-General for Ontario, the most disgusting is that of using profance language. The latest exhibition of his powers in this line was given a short time ago while receiving a deputation from Strathroy. The gentleman composing the deputation came from Strathroy for the purpose of laying before John Sandfield's notice the advisability of locating the West Middlesex Registry Office in that town. All the arguments they could adduce were met by the little Premier sputtering out—"What the h—ll has Strathroy done for me?" Apart altogether from the vulgar profanity of the language used by the Attorney-General, the very idea that before locating any public institution in a place he should require some personal benefit from some personal friends in that place is another sign that the man belongs to the most selfish and demoralized class of politicians. The ministerial organs denied that Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was prompted by political spite or vindictive motives when he removed the Deaf and Dumb Institution from Hamilton to Belleville.—They also try to smooth over his disgraceful conduct towards the Strathroy deputation. But in spite of all their ingenuity the facts remain unaltered, and is now generally understood that the settled policy of the Patent Combination is to support none but its supporters—and we regret to say there are too many instances on record to substantiate this.

Although Sandfield patronizes none but his patrons, it must not be supposed that he treats even his supporters all the same—Not by any means. In order to obtain a favor from the Axe Grinder, a man must not only be willing to serve him, but able also. We have had numerous instance of his treating some of his followers very meanly indeed. Go no further from our own doors than Listowel and a very shabby case can be found. Shortly after the campaign of '67 a deputation from Listowel waited upon the Attorney General respecting some municipal matters. The spokesman had been the Coalition candidate in N. Perth, and the delegation thought that consequently his appeal would be irresistable. Sandfield having received the delegation, soon after inquired their business. The spokesman commenced by saying that he had the honour of contesting the constituency in behalf of the Government, and was going on with details when he was impertinently interupted by the Attorney-General asking—"Do you wish to have your photograph in town, sir? Eh! Eph?" and thereupon, somewhat after the manner of a hog snuffling, he turned up his mouth and nose for a few seconds for the edification of his audience. As might be expected this male the would be member, though previously a devoted disciple, an angry man; and had he acted upon the impulse of the moment, instead of leaving his photograph in town he would have left the photograph of his first on the Attorney-General's face. Though this circumstance may not have been in print before, it is strictly true, and is fully proves that parties to secure courteous treatment from Sandfield, not to mention favors at his hands, must not simply be willing to support him, but they must be in a position to render him material assistance. His language is such as could only come out of the mouth of a man whose tongue is controlled by a mind capable of conceiving things of the most low, mean and vulgar nature.—Fergus News Record.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.—The Toronto correspondent of the Hamilton Times writes as follows:—"The political news of the street is that Sandfield has orders to follow up the appointment of Fitzgerald to a Judgeship with more liberal treatment of Catholics. It is rumoured on excellent authority that O'Donohoe has been offered the County Attorneyship of York if he will use his influence to raise the Catholic Leagne in favour of the Government. Merrick, Hughes, and Hynes, of Hamilton are also said to be approached. Doyle, of Goderich, McKeown, of Hamilton, are also said to have been interviewed by Sandfield. There is much dissension on political affairs by the Catholics of this city."

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR:—

Last week I had a letter from the President of the Second Junction R. R. inviting me to Belleville to see if I would take an interest in the construction of the G. J. R. R. We had a meeting of some of the Provisional Directors, and I made them an offer to take $100,000 stock in the road, lease it for a term of years, and go on with the construction as soon as possible, which offer was accepted. I, therefore, wish to inform the people of Peterboro that I am going to put the engineers on, get the line located, and commence the excavation, &c., right away. I intend running the line on or near Mr. Tates Survey, from Belleville to Peterboro, and from Peterboro to Bobcaygeon, & Fenlon Falls to the Back River in Rama, down the Valley of the River Severn, and to the mouth of the Muskoka River, on the Georgian Bay, where there is a good harbour. This will give this but and cheapest route for the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Western State generally, to the Eastern Markets. I intend being along with some of the directors of the Co. through the different Counties, Townships and Towns, to see what amount of bonuses can be got in the municipalities. It is my intention to push the road through with all speed. To this and it will be well for the municipalities to be thinking the matter of bonuses over, and give me all the assistance they can, so that no time may be lost in getting the whole route completed at an early day. I know that Peterboro feels a great interest in the early construction of the Grand Junction Railway, and I am certain the Town of Peterboro will do its share in the way of giving a liberal bonus. The line will be about 140 miles in length, and I shall require all the assistance I can get from both Municipalities and government.

Yours truly,
JOHN FOWLER.

Burleigh.

MR. EDITOR:—

Believing that you take a deep interest in affairs back here as well as everywhere in the County, and knowing that many of your readers would like to know a little about the Burleigh people, I may be permitted to state that the Burleigh Road Settlement is progressing favorable. A number of settlers are coming in this fall, and are making preparations for the winter. It is also encouraging for them to know that fall wheat has done well this year, and in consequence the settlers are sowing a large breadth of winter wheat again. We have suffered considerable from bush fires on account of the very dry summer; crossways and bridges in many places having been consumed. Mr. R. Bullied, I am sorry to say, got about 9 tons of Beaver Hay burned, and several other persons have suffered more or less in the same way.

On the night of the 7th instant a pretty severe frost injured the potatoes somewhat and perhaps tender garden vegetables.—Yet, dry as the season has been, we have had more or less frost every month this summer.

Mr. Wm. Graham is making a government road from Apsley across the Township of Chandos to the South end of Loon Lake, to the Township of Wolliston; and there are favorable reports of a very considerable tract of good land for settlement in Chandos and part of Methuen, and I understand that a number of parties intend settling there this season. Although busy trying to fell the forests and make houses for ourselves in the wilds of Canada, the people are not unmindful of spiritual things. We had a Sunday School Festival in the woods near Mr. R. Clifford's, lately.

The day was not as favorable as we could have wished in the forenoon, but the afternoon turned out fine. There was not less than 200 present. The children spent the evening in recitations, and the people listened attentively to them and to addresses by Mr. Brown, chairman; Mr. John Young, Mr. Anderson, Land Agent, and by Messrs. Craig and Campbell, of the Wesleyan and Presbyterian Mission in this settlement. The children, also, sang several beautiful Sabbath School pieces. Swings had been erected and many availed themselves of these to amuse and pass the time. The day was mostly pleasantly spent, and at the close three hearty cheers were given for our good Queen Victoria, all parties feeling, that on the Burleigh Road, as elsewhere, how pleasant it is to dwell together in unity.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

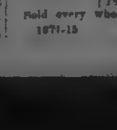
Contagious diseases, such as horse sil, glander, &c., may be prevented by the use of Sheridan's Carbonic Condition Powders. Persons traveling with horses should take notice of this.

Iron in the Blood.—When the blood is well supplied with its iron element, we feel vigorous and full of animation. It is an insufficiency of this vital element that makes us feel weak and low spirited, in such cases the Peruvian Syrup (a protoxide of iron) can supply this deficiency, and its use will invigorate us wonderfully.

Genius and Labour.—Alexander Hamilton once said to an intimate friend: 'Men give me some credit for genius—but all the genius I have lies just in this—when I have an subject in hand, I study it profoundly, and day and night it is before me—I overlure it in all its bearings, and my mind becomes pervaded with it.' Now a great deal of study has been bestowed upon the "Canadian Pain Destroyer"—we admit what it is—the first of pain removing agents, and the best medicine for the cure of colds, coughs rheumatism, summer complaints &c. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per bottle.

Two Questions Easily Answered.—Why should men wear beards? Because they are a great protection to the throat and lungs, and add much to their personal appearance. Why should we use "Brown's Bronchial Wafers?" Because when used for coughs, colds, tickling in the throat, hoarseness, &c.; they act like a charm. Ministers and Lawyers use them, physicians recommend them and singers and public speakers say they are the very best medicine in existence for the cure of such complaints. Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25 cts. per box.

Epps's Cocoa.—Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and comforting.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately, flavoured beverage which may save us many a doctors' bill."—Civil Service Gazette. made simply with Boiling Water or Milk. Each packet labelled "JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Milky Cocoa. (Cocoa and Condensed Milk).



Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the PAIN-KILLER. The Parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are very positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did all it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fashion, for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recommend the PAIN-KILLER, every where I go they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' legend came around, (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear?

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The PAIN-KILLER does not profess to cure everything either in the Dr. about the bottle or the "Manual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence. Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whose testimony cannot be disputed.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods.

Wife:—Judge Jones was so incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Sons and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificates selected from quantities written from all parts of his own house.

Choice Poetry.

How to Manage Him.

"How will you manage your husband?
I will tell you my dear, if I can,
He is really a wonderful creature,
That troublesome animal—man,
Yes, really a wonderful creature,
Inconstant and queer!
But you'll soon know the secret by hearing
The modus operandi, my dear.

If he stays out too late in the evening,
Partaking of supper and wine,
Don't prove him a base fabricator,
When he comes by asking the time,
For he surely will tell you the town clock,
But the moment before rang out one—
When it struck he had counted it over
Just three times before it had done."

And then if his hat in the morning,
Is smaller than his head,
Don't hint by merest allusion
That his lordship went tipsy to bed.
But rather regret the occurrence
A phenomenon puzzling queer,
With a strange look of mystification
In your eyes, if he's watchin my dear.

And don't fail to sew on his buttons,
And mend all his clothing with care;
Don't tease him for money for shopping;
Don't frown when he acts like a bear;
Don't tell him too often, my deary,
That your head is aching with pain,
Lest he whispers, way down in his bosom
"Oh, I wish I was single again"

Don't tell him that Mary the house maid
And Ann, the obstreperous cook
Refuse to receive your suggestions
With even so much of a look,
Don't tell him how very annoying
You often find it to be
To be told to 'get out of the kitchen,
And don't come a-botherin' of me!'

But always seem cheerful and happy,
And always look pleasant and gay;
Than a frown there is nothing more potent
In driving one's husband away.
And thus you must ever keep striving;
You'll find it an excellent plan;
But whatever you do dear, remember
That your husband is only a man.

The Use of Tobacco.

While the general means for preserving health are materially improved by attention to exercise, cleanliness, moderation in eating, and abstinence from alcoholic stimulus, in one respect there is no great improvement, perhaps even a deterioration in the public health in the increased use of tobacco. The great epochs in the life of youth the nineteenth century, seems to be the first pair of boots, the first pair of long pants, and the first cigar, crowned, perhaps, by the climax of the first stovepipe hat.—Many perhaps, it may be said most of our adult male population, including most valued, and in other respects, the wisest citizens, even not a few of our religious advisers, impair their health and shorten their lives by the use of tobacco. It is with-in the experience of every physician to have seen the lost appetites, shaking ladies, and various curable and incurable diseases, especially in persons of sedentary habits, traceble beyond question to the use of this powerful narcotic poison.

Nowhere except in this country, could any one pretend to be a gentleman, or associate with such, much less with ladies, who has the insufferably disgusting habit, both to sight and smell, of chewing this abominable weed; but as usage renders tolerable in society here what is regarded as the opposite elsewhere, it must be left for the curious of polite society to taloo tobacco chewing.—It can be no queston that this is one of the most injurious ways of using tobacco, as much of its deleterous principals must inevitably find its way to the stomach, impairing digestion, rendering dry and insensible the mucous membrance of the mouth and throat, and causing an unnecessary secretion and waste of saliva, with enlargement of the glands concerned in this secretion.

The most common and genteel, but none the less injurious method, is by smoking tobacco, either by the the more or less fragrant cigar, but by the always abominable and cheaper pipe. The volatile ingredients are inhaled with every breath, conveyed into the inmost recesses of the lungs, and their absorbed by the myriads of air-cells though their exceedingly thin membranes, whose extent of surface is very much greater than the whole external surface of the body. This subtle poison, the one selected by the surgeon, before the discovery of etherization, to produce complete prostration of the muscular system after antimony and phlebotomy had failed, is deliberately and habitually introduced into the system, inducing a general febrile habit, nature's protest at such indignity, none less real because disregarded.

A late Hamburg paper say. "Tobacco burns out the blood of the German people's, destroyes the teeth, their eyes; their lungs, their brains; turns their flesh into mummy; and their mind into metaphysics."

Physicians are as fond of the weed as any other class in the community, though they know its delerigious effects; still they may advis others to abstain on the principle of thee sign post which shows the way but does not follow it. The fact shows the singular fascination of this weed, and its greater danger, since even the custodians of the public health worship its fatal shrine.

The late eminent surgeon of Boston, Dr. John C. Warren, writes: "For more than thirty years I have been in the habit of inquiring of patients who came to me with cancers of the lips and tongue, whether they used tobacco—if they have sometimes answer in the negative, I can truly say, that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, such cases are exceptions to the general rule."

An English review says: "Man is undoubtedly the paragon of animals, for he can do what no other animal can do—that is, smoke tobacco, smoke tobacco, chew tobacco, and after sufficient practice, swallow tobacco juice. We do not believe that any other creature, by any amount of practice, could overcome its natural disgust for tobacco in any shape."

Finally, a strong and a sensible writer says of tobacco: "It has utterly ruined thousands of boys. It tends to soften and weaken the bones, and it greatly injures the brain, the spinal marrow, and the whole nervous system. A boy who smokes early frequently, or in any way use large quantities of tobacco, never makes a man of energy, and generally lacks physical as well as mental power. We would particularly warn boys who want to be anything in the world, to shun tobacco as a most fatal poison." Good Health.

An old man of Aberdeen who had been h-n-pecked all his life, was visited on his death bed by a clergyman. The old man appeared very indifferent, and the parson tried to arrouse him by talking to him of the King of Terrors. "Hout, tout, mon, I'm no, senart. The King o' Terrors I've been living six and-thirty year wi' the Queen o' thim, and the King canna be muckle waur."

The Ottawa Free Press tells the following fishstory. A Frenchman, while fishing near Kettle Island on Saturday after noon, hooked a large maskinonge, which afterwards proved to weigh 35 pounds. In the act of pulling him in a large eagle swooped down on the fish, and fastened his talons in it with such force that it could not get away; and the Frenchman pulled in both the fish and bird, and has now the eagle in his possession alive.

Maxims for Farmers.

1 Only good farming pays. He who sows or plants without reasonable assurance of good crops, annually, might better earn wages of some capable neighboor than work for so poor a paymaster as he is certain to prove himself.

2 The good farmer is proved such by the steady appreciation of his crops. Any one may reap an ample harvest from fertile virgin soil; the good farmer alone grows good crops at first, and better and better ever afterward.

3 It is far easier to maintain the productive capacity of a farm than to restore it. To exhaust its fecundity, and then attempt its restoration by buying costly comercial fertilizers, is wasteful and irrational.

4 The good farmer mainly such products as are least exhaustive. Necessity may constrain him, for the first year or two, to sell grain, or even hay; but he will send of his surplus, mainly in the form of cotton, wool, meat, or butter and chees, or something else that returns to the soil nearly all that is taken from it. A bank account daily drawn upon, while nothing is deposited to its credit, must soon respond "No funds." So with a farm similarly treated.

5 Rotation is at least negative fertilization. It may not positively enrich a farm; it will at least retard and postpone its impoverishment. He who grows wheat after wheat, corn after corn, for twenty years, will need to emigrate before that term is fulfilled. The same farm cannot support (or endure) him longer than that. All our great wheat-growing sections of fifty years ago are wheat-growing no longer; while England grows larger crops thereof on the very fields that fed the armies of Saxon Harold and William the Conqueror. Rotation has preserved these, as the lack of it has ruined those.

6 The best investment a farmer can make for his children is that which surrounds thier youth with the rational delights of a beauteous, attractive home. The dwelling may be small and rude, yet a few flowers will embelish, as choice fruit trees will enrich and gladden it; while grass and shade are within the reach of the humblest.

Hardly any labour done on a farm is so profitable as that which makes the wife and children fond and proud of their home.

7. Wisdom is never dear, provided the article be genuine. I have known farmers who toiled constantly from daybrake to dark yet died poor, because, through ignorance, they wrought to disadvantage, if every farmer would devote two hours on each day to reading and reflection, there would be fewer failures in farming than there are at present.

8 A good, practical education, including a good trade, is a better outfit for a youth than a grand estate with the draw back of an empty mind. many parents have saved and pinched to leave their children rich, when half the sum lavished would have profited them far more had it been devoted to the cultivation of their minds, the enlargement of their captivity to think, observe, and work. The one structure that no neighborhood can afford to do without is the school house.

9. A small library of well selected books in his home has saved many a youth from wandering into the baneful ways of the prodigal son. Where parternal strictness and severity would breed nothing but dislike and dislike and a fixed resolve to absconl at the first opportunity, good and pleasent surroundings have weaned many a youth from the first wild impulse to go to sea or cross the continent, and make him a docile contented, obedient, happy lingerer by the parental fire side. In a family, however rich or poor, no other good is so cheap or so precious as thoughtful, watchful love.

10 Most men are born poor, but no man, who has average capacities and tolerable luck may remain so. And the farmer's calling, though offering no sudden leaps, no ready short-cuts to opulence, is the surest of all ways from poverty and want to comfort and and independence. Other men must climb; the temperate, frugal, diligent provident farmer may grow into competence and every necessary to external happiness. Each year of his devotion to his homestead may find it more valuable, more attractive than the last and leave it better still.—Horace Greely.

Amusing Tricks.

Freezing Mixture. Dissolve five drachms of nuriate of ammonia, and five drachms of nitre both finely powdered in two ounces of water. A thermometer immersed in the solution will show that the temperature is reduced below 32 degrees. If a thermometer tube filled with water be now suspended within, the water will be frozen.

Wine upon Water. Half fill a glass with water, throw a bit of crumb of a loaf into it, about the size of a nut; pour some wine lightly on the bread, and you will see the water at the bottom of the glass, and the wine floating at the top of it.

Night Light. Put a bit of phosphorus into a small phial, then fill in one-third with boiling olive oil, and cork it close; whenever the stopper is taken out in the night, light will be evolved sufficient to show the hour upon a watch.

To Obtain Flame from Water.—Put about an ounce of iron filings into a phial with about three or four ounces of water; pour a little sulphuric acid upon the iron, and hydrogen gas will be evolved, which may be burnt by placing a lighted match to the mouth of the phial.

Metallic Vegetation. Drop upon a clean plate of copper, a small quantity of nitrate of silver. In a short time, a metallic vegetation will be perceptible, branching out in a very elegant and pleasing form.

To Produce Cold. Take a phial in one hand containing some pulverized muriate of ammonia, pour a little water upon it and shake the mixture; in this instance, a sensation of cold will immediately be felt.

To Melt Steel as Easy as Lead.—Make a piece of steel red hot in the fire then hold it with a pair of pincers or tongs; take in the other hand a stick of brimstone, and touch the piece of steel with it. Immediately after their contact, you will see the steel melt and drop like a liquid.

Manners.—Many little boys should be mannerly How to be so is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they cannot behave to suit themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful, and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger, or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling and acquire graceful and easy manners, that is, to do the best they can all the time at home, as well abroad. Good manners are not learned from arbitary teaching so much as acquired from habit. They grow upon upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse rough manner at home begets a habit of roughness which we cannot leave off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company, are those that are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all the best things, especially good manners.

Watering Plants with Iron.—It is stated that wonderful effects may be obtained by watering fruits and vegetables with a solution of sulphate of iron. Treated in this way beans will grow nearly double the size, and will have a much more savory taste. The pear seems especially adapted for this treatment. It is equally applicable to plants and flowers, imparting to them unusual growth and beauty. Old nails thrown into water and left to rust will give to it all the necessary qualities for forcing vegetation as decribed.

Keeping Garden Walks Clean.—A very simple and easy way to keep walks in a flower garden clean is to throw boiling water over them once in two or three weeks. The weeds are not only killed, but the ground is always smooth and hard, as it does not have to be dug over

The best plan for preventing the explosion of boilers, is to fill them up with ice water and then set them in a cool place.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and, consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The operation this excellent medicine enjoys, in almost incredible cures, many of which are literally marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination in which they were painfully suffering, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or powers.

Scrofula is the most destructive enemies of mankind. Often, this insidious and subtle tenant of the sepulchre undermines the constitution, and no one has the assurance of exemption from its severest attacks. Although it may be inherited, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or more of its fell forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or it may breed in the liver, or show its presence in running sores on the skin, or foul ulcers in any part of the body. Hence the accumulated evil of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is not to be estimated when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Tilo, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Ulcerous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilitic Diseases and Mercurial Diseases are cured be it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this powerful will cure the complaint. Female Complaints and Uterine Obstructions, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

THE BEAUTIFUL LAND OF HEAVEN.

BY E. A. BACON.

I often dream of a land of bliss
Far away in some region unknown,
Where the lovely ones from earth we miss,
In their youth and beauty have gone.

I dream its a land of fadeless flowers,
And the skies are of azure blue,
And the children live in its sunny bowers
With hearts that are tender and true.

I dream the dear Saviour forever is near
To guide them by voice and by hand,
To shield and protect them with tenderest care,
Far away in the beautiful land.

I dream when their dear little feet press that shore,
As arch to the Saviour is given,
A new song is sung in that land evermore,
That beautiful land of heaven.

Oh, I dream that no sorrow ever reaches the shore,
That no heart by misfortune is riven;
But the soul moves upward and on evermore
In that beautiful land of heaven.

A SCOTTISH TALE.

BY AGILE PENNE.

(From the Saturday Star Journal.)

"The heather flowers are dark in the hollows of the hills, Though far along each rocky peak, the sunlight lingers still."

Down the wooded side of the Lammermuir Hills, a man, young in years and muscular in build, made his way. His dress of Lincoln green, and the horn by his side told that he was following the pleasure of the chase.

The sun slowly sinking in the west warned him that the shades of night were near.

The huntsman paused at the foot of the hill in the centre of a rude road that wound its way by the sea.

"By the Mass!" he cried, "I'll wager a dozen broad crowns that I have lost my way. Here is the sea; and, yonder to the north, my road must be. It does not speak well for the denizens of those woods and rocks that my horse should be spirited away, because I left him for a moment tied to a greenwood tree. For aught I know, I have stumbled into a moss-trooper's nest. There would be long faces at Stirling Castle if I should be carried a prisoner into the English pale. My road should lie this way. I'll go onward; perhaps I may chance upon those whom I have parted with in the forest."

With a light swinging step, the young man went on. Hardly had he gone ten paces ere from the wood that hemmed in the road, came the stern command:

"Halt!"

Then forth came from the cover of the trees, came a dozen rough fellows, whose warlike garb and manner told that they were bred to the trade of arms.

The stranger cast a rapid glance behind him, as if about to flee, and closed his hand upon the hilt of the long and heavy broad sword that hung by his side. The glance, however, told him that flight was hopeless, for six more fellows, armed and habited like the others, filed into the path behind him.

"Give you good-day, friend," quoth the leader of the men who had laid in ambush, advancing to the stranger. He was tall and stoutly built, with a clear blue eye and a yellow beard. "What seek you in this section? If I mistake not you are a stranger. Lay not your hand upon your sword. We seek not to do you harm. Who are you?"

"First, answer me one question," said the stranger, in reply. "Are you in the service of James of Scotland?"

"Yea," replied the other.

With a nimble bound the stranger placed his back against a tree, and flashed his bright broad-sword from its sheath.

"Then you must take me dead; never living!" the man at bay cried, dauntly.

"You cry loudly, my master," said the leader of the warlike band. "Your name, so that we may know whether you are a foe to Scotland's king or not." And as he spoke a shrewd smile was on his face.

"Men call me Hob of Teviotside. I would not deny my name were you James himself!" the stranger said.

"The moss-trooper!" exclaimed the other, in surprise. And the soldiers looked at the stalwart figure of the stranger in wonder.

"So men call me."

"I've heard of you; but sheath your sword. We owe no homage to James of Scotland. I am called John Kennedy, and follow the lead of English Will.

The name of English Will, otherwise called William Brotherton, was well known to the stranger. He was one of the worst of the English marauders who took advantage of the almost constant war existing between England and Scotland to improve his own wordly goods at the expense of the Scots living near the border.

"You have nothing to fear: dog eats not dog, and the English moss-trooper does not prey upon his Scottish brother," Kennedy said; "but what brings you to Lammermuir Hills and alone?"

"Myself and hard fortune have been bosom friends lately," replied Hob, with a sigh. "The Lord of Graham gave myself and men a sound drubbing a week ago at Stillwayburn, and since that time, the king's men have hunted me down, until at last not a single trooper remains to back my quarrel."

"Join our band then. We need stout men-at-arms like yourself. Good swords are not over plenty. And if you seek revenge on the Graham, ere nightfall you shall have it."

"Ah! how?" questioned Hob.

"A fair sprig of the house of Graham lives in the tower of Carkirk, just round yonder point. Our leader English Will, has been charmed by the beauties of fair Anne Graham, and within an hour we mean to seize the Tower and bear off the girl. The place is poorly garrisoned, and the capture will be easy."

"I'll bear you company," said Hob, after thinking the matter over for a moment.

"Good; we expect English Will back every moment to give the orders for the attack."

And even as Kennedy spoke, the leader of the outlaws came around the bend in the road.

"Whom have we here?" the Englishman asked, as he looked upon the moss-trooper.

Kennedy explained.

"You are welcome, Hob!" cried English Will. "Your fame has crossed the border, and many an English lord curses the hour when you raided on his lands. Where are the horses, Kenedy?"

"Close at hand in the thicket. I have added to the number, for an hour ago I found a gray steed tied within the forest, as fine a beast as ever man backed."

"By St. Andrews! you have captured my horse, comrade!" exclaimed Hob. "I lost my gray steed in the thicket."

"'Tis yours again; we rob not our friends," said Kenedy.

"Let one man remain with the horses; the rest with me will surprise the Tower!" cried English Will.

The party proceeded on their way. Keeping within the shelter of the wood, they approached as near to the grim old house that stood by the sea, as they could without betraying their presence to the warden at the gate. Then one of the troopers, who was disguised in a rough plowman's garb, sallied forth from the wood, and, approaching the warden of the castle, engaged him in conversation.

The unsuspecting Scot, not dreaming of danger, readily gave the information that the stranger asked. Then suddenly the Englishman seized the warden by the throat. Forth poured the outlaws from the wood, and ere the soldiers of the castle realized that they were attacked, English Will and his followers had won the portal.

The struggle was short. The Scots, outnumbered, made but a feeble resistance, and soon the tower of Carkirk and its inmates were at the mercy of the marauders.

In the grand hall of the castle stood the fair girl, Anne Graham, pale with terror, clinging to the breast of her aged father.

"Why do you come with weapons of war in your hands in time of peace?" asked the old laird.

"I love your daughter, Annie," replied English Will. "I would have her to wife and, as the only way to win her, I use the strong arm of power."

"When Scotland's king hears of this outrage, dearly will you rue it!" cried the laird, in anger.

"Then he must seek me across the English border, and many a glittering spear must he bring in his train," replied English Will, laughing scornfully. "But come; to horse and away!"

Soon the outlaws were mounted. In spite of the hapless maid, in spite of the angry wrath of the aged father, Anne was borne away by the troopers.

The gray steed of Hob—a creature of matchless strength and beauty—bore the captive girl and the moss-trooper.

In the saddle, English Will gave the command, "forward," when, like an arrow from a bow, from out the throng, shot the gray charger with its double burden.

Away up the road leading to the north went the steed at a headlong pace. Hob, in the saddle, held the light form of Annie in his arms.

In rage, the outlaws, headed by English Will, gave chase to the fugitives.

"Curses upon the traitor!" cried the Englishman. "By St. George, I swear, I'll flay him alive when he falls into my hands."

"He may escape us!" cried Kenedy, as he rode furiously onward by his leaders side.

"It is hardly possible, though his horse is a noble one, far better than any of ours; but the steed carries a double load. We must win in the end."

On went the chase. Fast went the gray steed, and fast the troopers followed. But little by little, the moss trooper drew away from his pursuers.

The Englishmen perceived it, and strove to increase their pace. The heavy spurs dug into the heaving flanks; the horses were urged to their topmost speed.

A single glance the moss-trooper gave at the foe behind who pressed him so closely. Then to his lips he drew the hunting-horn hung by his side. The shrill notes woke the echoes of the surrounding hills.

"Do you hear that?" cried Kennedy. "He has wound his horn for assistance; he may have friends at hand."

"Tush!" exclaimed English Will, in anger; "'tis but a device on his part to frighten us from the chase. 'Twill not answer, though."

The horses of the pursers began to flag; the pace was telling upon them; but the gray charger, despite its double load, still held its own, and galloped on as swiftly as at first.

With an oath the Englishman noted he was losing ground.

"Dismount, Long John!" he cried, to one of his men who bore a long bow at his back and a quiver of arrows at his side, "try me a gray-goose shaft on yonder horse. A murtain on thy hand if thou canst not bring him down."

Lightly the archer leaped from his horse, fitted an arrow to his bow and drew it to his shoulder. The twang of the bow-string rung sharply on the air. The shaft whistled along in its flight. The horse, turning a slight angle in the wood, presented a fair mark. The arrow passed through the steed, just behind the shoulder. He faltered, fell upon his knees, and then rolled over on his side, dead.

A cry of joy went up from the marauders. As the horse fell, the Scot had leaped nimbly from the saddle, still bearing the girl in his arms, and gained the ground unhurt.

Like birds of prey the Englishmen came onward to their victims.

But, round the angle of the crooked road came a large troop of Scottish horsemen, wearing the royal colors. Bright flashed the steel in the air as the northern broadswords leaped from their sheaths.

The marauders, amazed, wheeled their horses quickly around and sought safety in flight. The pursuers became the pursued.

The Scots dashed on after the retreating foe.

Nearly all of the Englishmen escaped by forsaking their horses and finding shelter in the wood; but English Will, John Kennedy and a few others were taken prisoners.

"A blight upon the hand of thy foul knave who with his shaft has slain the best steed that ever felt the press of a Scot's knee!" cried the man who had called himself Hob of Teviotside.

The Englishmen looked upon the speaker in astonishment. From the respect paid to him by the Scots, they guessed that "Hob" was a noble of rank. A sudden light broke upon Will.

"We have been tricked, then; your are no moss-trooper!"

"No, by the grace of Heaven, I am James King of Scotland!" replied the pretended moss-trooper laughing.

Many a long day in Stirling Tower the marauders rued the hour when they met the Scottish king in disguise amid the Lammermuir Hills, and who aided on the Tower of Carkirk. And Annie Graham never forgot to pray for good King James, who saved her from English Will.

We are sorry to learn that the Hon. Neil Dow has been compelled to leave his engagements on his lecture tour through this Province on account of the illness of his son.

Children's Treasures.

I thought I knew before that grown-up people should regard the rights of their children, and be careful not to destroy any of their precious little possessions. But it seems I needed a little better experience to make me know it thoroughly.

In clearing up the room I gathered up some torn pieces of newspaper, and with them a leaf from an old blank book, scrawled all over with the curious hieroglyphics my little boy delights in. I crushed all up together and stuffed them in the stove, with a sudden fear as the flames devoured them, that the child might miss his drawing. But he had made so many scrawls that I could hardly see why he should wish to preserve any of them.

After breakfast I heard him saying, "I wonder where that paper is that I marked on last night. I wish I could find it.—Don't you know, mamma, that piece of 'countin' book I made machinery on when you lay on the lounge? Where do you suppose it is?

"Can't you make another like it? I asked.

"I can't remember just how that was," he said; "and it had my dandiest cars on it. I want that. I must find it. And he emptied his box of playthings and tools upon the floor, to make sure whether it was among his books and papers or not. I had cut the carriage to tell him it was gone past recovery, and by the cruel thoughtlessness of his own mamma. At last he concluded to try again on a fresh leaf of an old account book. Presently he came to me saying. "Oh, I do want that piece I had last night so much. Can't you find it for me?"

Suddenly I found grace to say, "My little boy, I am afraid that mamma burned up this morning with some torn newspapers."

"Oh, I can't live!" he burst out, "I want it so very much." For a minute or two I suppose his loss was quite severe to him to bear as was Carlyle's for his man's heart, when he first discovered that his maid-servant had kindled the fire with the precious manuscript of the "French Revolution," on which he had labored so long.

My boy saw that I was sorry, and soon became reconciled to a loss for which there was no remedy. It is one of the greatest wrongs little children have to bear—the failure of grown-up people to appreciate their feelings and aims. We expect the little ones to understand us, and to try to conform to our standards, but we lose many beautiful lessons in not trying to enter into their spirit and plans—matching the outreaching of their growing faculties with wise and gentle guiding, so that all their happy play shall be really useful education.

My mother told me how she learned to enter into child's feelings and bear with its "clutter." Her first-born son—a child always dear to her heart because the angels took him so early—had got possession of an old jackknife. She had just swept the carpet and put the room to "rights" when she discovered Henry with a pine stick and his knife, making little chips all over the bright clean carpet.

"Oh, Henry!" she said, "you have littered my clean carpet. See how badly those little chips look on the floor."

Wise wondering gravity he gazed at the dear chips he had been so proud to be able to scatter, then, lifting his frank in nocent eye, he said earnestly, "They look pitty to me."

Instantly the whole scene was beautiful to my mother—little chips and all; and she carried the sweet picture with her ever since, and all the little children love her the better for it without knowing why.

Gems of Thought.

We suffer more from anger and grief than from the very things for which we anger and grieve.

The three most beautiful words in the English language are Mother, Home and Heaven.

You may as well talk to an honest thief, an ignorant philosopher, or a cowardly hero, as to a proud Christian.

If we did but know how little some enjoy the great things they possess, there would not be so much envy in the world.

The hidden cistern of the soul may fill fast with sweet tears, while the windows through which it looks are undimmed by a drop of moisture.

When thou art obliged to speak, be sure to speak the truth; for equivocation is half way to lying and lying is the whole way to hell.—Penn.

How sweetly the music of silver bells from the time to come falls on the listening heart. How mournfully swell the chimes of the days that are no more.

Hope is the dawn of joy, memory its twilight, but this prefers to shed the color less dew or rain, and the day which the drawn promises, breaks in, but no other sun.

The sword was never intended for murder but for defence; neither was the tongue intended for slander but prayers and praises.

Let us order our conversation in the world that we may live, when we are dead, in the affections of the best, and leave an honorable testimony in the consciences of the worst.

Be gentle—if you cannot relieve do not grieve the poor. Give them soft words, if nothing else. Put yourself in the place of every poor man, and deal with him as you would God should deal with you.—J. Wesley

He that can apprehend and consider vice, with all her train and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer, that which is truly better—he is the true wayfaring Christian.

Courting in Church.

A young gentleman happened to sit in a pew adjoining one in which a young lady, for whom he received a sudden passion, felt desirous of entering into a court-ship on the spot, but the place not suiting a formal declaration, the exigency suggested the following plan: He politely handed her a Bible open, and with a pin stuck it in the following verse:—2nd Epistle of John 6th verse—And now I beseech thee, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto you, but that which we had from the begining, that we love one another. She returned it with the following: 2nd Ruth, 10th verse—Then she fell on her face and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have thy grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take notice of me, seeing I am a stranger? He returned the book pointing to the 12th verse of the 3rd Epistle of John "I Have many thing to write with paper and ink, but I trust to come unto you and speak face to face." From the above interview the marriage took place the following week.

PUZZLES:—A man has nine trees, and wants to plant them in an orchard, so that he may have eight rows and three trees in each row. The question is, how to arrange them?

Place ten trees in five rows, of four trees in each row.

How can thirteen trees be arranged in sixteen rows, with three trees in each row.

Parental Authority.

There are many families in which parental authority is a sad discount. Perhaps the father is strong elsewhere, but weak at home. A three, or five year old child tyrannize over him, though he would yield before no opposition outside of the family circle. Not that his will is not good for obedience and order on the part of his children; but his parental fondness, and his weakness or vascillation of purpose ruins all his good plans and gives anarchy almost absolute control of that house which is nearly the sum total of all he cherishes on earth. In his great kindness to his offspring he is exceedingly cruel. By his submission to all their whims, he cherishes in them passions and dispositions calculated to make them unlovely and unhappy during life, and to ruin them beyond this present time. Their fondness, now fitful and capricious to their parents, will end, in contempt and disregard; for that affection which does not carry with it a raling disire to please its object, is based on selfishness. A filial affection which does not enjoin obedience to parental authority is of a questionable sort. Parents who do not enforce obedience in their families are sowing to reap the reproaches of their children, as well as that of their own consiences, when it will be too late to remedy disaster in which it will have involved the whole family.

Harshness may inforce obedience, but it will be outward rather than of the heart. As soon as the yoke of absolute, unfeeling authority can be thrown off it will be done, and the spirit of recklessness will run rampant, rejoicing in its liberation from a hated yoke.

Firmness, consideration, and love will enable parents to rule in most cases with comparative ease; and those very restraints thrown around their offspring will seem like silken cords rather than fetters of iron. Affection, obedience, confidence, and happiness will reign together, and foster sweet memories for other years, when the members of the now loving family will be widely scattered. Those memories will be a power in the hour of temptation.—Religious Telescope.

The Temperance Cause in Victoria.

Last week the Canada Temperance Union held a splendid meeting in Toronto under the able presidency of Hon. Malcom Cameron. During the course of the proceedings the following characteristic letter was read from the Rev. M. Stafford, P. P., of Lindsay.

"Hon. Mr. Cameron:

"DEAR SIR,—I am sorry that I cannot be with you to day. I would meet an assembly of noble hearts and generous souls, such as I have invariably found to be those who are engaged in the work that has brought you together to-day. Please say to the Convention that they can rely on the hearty and active co-operation and support of the 950 members of the Emily and Ennismore Society, with Father Coyle at their head; and also of the 2,052 members of the Lindsay Society, than whom none can be found more faithful.

"God speed you and hasten the day when our people may be protected from their greatest enemy, and when the poison alcohol may be consigned to its appropriate place among the poisons, and kept there. When this day comes Canada will enter on a new era, and praise the men who will be the redeemers of our race. The cheer you gave us at your last convention was not without effect. Again we all wish you God speed, and promise to be with you in heart and soul to fight the common fiend with all your weapons.

Accept my best wishes for your personal happiness."

GREAT FLOOD IN THE AVONDALE DISTRICT.—A most destructive flood occured recently in the district watered by the Avon and its tributaries; growing province was destroyed by the acre, bridges were swept away, trees uprooted, and whole fields converted into lakelets. At an early hour on Sabbath morning, rain began to fall in deluging torrents, and continued without abatement for fully twelve hours. The consequence was the flooding of various burns and streams that flow into the Avon, down which the waters rushed with devastating force, committing great havoc on all surroundings. two wooden bridges were swept away; and for a time considerable anxiety was felt lest Geil Bridge—an old-fashioned high-arched erection—would prove unequal to the strain, the water at one time being within one foot and a half of the top. The country all round seemed one vast sheet of water. The road leading to Ploughland was quite impassable, the water upon it being in some places being as high as three feet. It was late on Sunday evening ere the water began to subside; and the scene presented on Monday morning was one of the most distressing. Wherever the eye turned nothing but tokens of devastation where to be met with. Entire fields of grain, which but two days before seemed almost ready for the sickle, were now to all appearances utterly destroyed. Fortunately so far as is yet known, no lives have been sacrificed.—Glasgow Herald.

CHLORIDE OF CALCIUM.—The substance has been extensively used for the abstraction of water; the melted article has been generally employed. The hariness of the pieces, however, is very annoying in reducing them to the size wanted in practice, and even when so reduced, only the outside of pieces can act in the way required. It is, therefore, proposed to use chloride of calcium which has been dried at a high temperature. The experience gained in using this porous and soft substance under different circumstances, as in abstracting water from alcohol, ether, chloroform, chlorine, carbonic acid etc., is highly favrable to its general introduction.

MAKING CHANGE.—The withdrawn of all denominations of Provincial notes, less than the $4, has caused a good deal of inconvenience to business men—small bills being required to make change. The Canadian silver is also falling short of the demand. In this connection it may be stated that counterfeit Canadian quarter are becoming alarmingly plentiful. They are an exceedingly dangerous immitation, and have deceived many whose experience ought to protect them from being victimized. Look out for counterfeit 25 cents pieces.

PUZZLES.—It is reported that King Charles of Sweden is about to marry a daughter of the King of Denmark. If so their Will be a new genealogical puzzel—for the King of Sweden's daughter is already married to the King of Denmark's son; the new bridegroom will therefore become his own daughter's brother in-law, and the Danish Crown Prince will be the son of his own sister.—A similar tangle exists among the Mormon leaders in Utah—the rebellious Elder Stenhouse, not long ago, married a daughter of Brigham Young, and a son of Brigham married Stenhouse's daughter. The worst of the Mormon business is that in the rebellion against Brigham, the two wives take the sides respectively of their fathers.—"Things are mixed" accordingly.

Why, Tom my dear fellow! how old you look. Dare say, Bob, for the fact is, I never was so old before in my life.

Siege of Jerusalem.

Paris having fallen before its German besiegers, We naturally look back to ancient times to see how sieges resulted. Just eighteen hundred years ago, in the year 70, the great seige of Jerusalem, by Titus, took place. The Roman conqueror, having established his camp on Scopas and the Mount of Olives, burnt the suburbs, cut down the trees, and raised banks of earth against the walls. On these walls were placed arches and batters of javelines, and before them the catapults and balistas who threw darts and huge stones. They also built towers seventy-five feet high, plated with iron, in which they placed archers and slings to drive the Jews from the walls.—They carried the first line of defence on the fifteenth day, and then waited for famine to do its work. The Jews at this time began to desert to the enemy in great numbers, and all of these wretches the Roman tortured and crucified before the walls (at one time five hundred a day,) so that, as Josephus says, "room was wanted for the crosses, and crosses were wanted for the bodies." In the walls of the city famine was now ravaging. families perished daily, and the streets were strewn with dead bodies that no one cared to bury. Thieves plundered the half deserted homes, and any who showed signs of resistance, for who still lingered in the last agonies of starvation. The dead, the Jews threw down from the walls into the valleys below. In the meantime, the Roman soldiers, abundantly supplied with corn from Syria, mocked the starving on the wall by showing them food. Added to these horrors were the quarrels of the rival chiefs, Simon and John—the former of whom held the upper city, and the latter the temple. They murdered each other's followers daily and continued the quarrelling until the day the Romans entered the city. During the progress of the siege, at one time, the Jews seeing the temple in danger during one of the assaults, set fire to a cloister that joined the temple and the castle of Antonia, and prepared for a desperate resistance in their stronghold. In the conflagration, many of the Romans advancing too eagerly, perished. During all this time, the starving Jews ate their shoes, belts, and even the leather thongs of their shields. Friends fought for food, and robbers broke into every house where it was known that corn was hidden. Josephus even mentions a well-known case of a woman of wealth from beyond Jordan, who ate her own child. The walls of the temple was so massive as to resist the battering ram for six day, so Titus gave orders to burn down the gates. At last after a desperate resistance, the Jews were driven into the inner court, and the temple was set on fire and destroyed in spite of all the efforts of Titus to save it. When the Jews first saw the flames spring up, Josephus says, they raised a great cry and sixteen thousand defenders perished in the fire. The resistance now became very feeble, and the Jews were utterly disheartened. The Romans once masters of the city, slew all the Jews they met in the narrow lanes, and set fire to the houses. In many cases intire families died of hunger. They butchered all the old and infirm, and drove the woman and young men into the court of the temple. The male under sixteen were sent to the Egyptian mines; several thousand were given to provincial amphitheaters to fight with the gladiators and wild beasts; but before all of them could be sent away, eleven thousand of them perished from famine. Altogether in this cruel siege, there perished eleven hundred thousand Jews. This enormous multitude is accounted for by the fact, that when Titus sat down before Jerusalem, the city was full of people from all part of Judea come up to celebrate the Feast of Unleaven Bread.

Words and their Uses.

AGGRAVATE.—This word should never be employed in reference to persons, as it means nearly to add weight to—to make an evil more oppressive; injury is aggravated by insult. It is sometimes improperly used in the sense of irritate, as "I was much aggravated by his conduct."

BALANCE, in the sense of rest, remainder, remnant, residue, is an abomination. Balance is, metaphorically, the difference two sides of an account—the amount which is necessary to make one equal to the other. Yet we continually hear of the balance of this or that thing, even the balance of a congregation or any army.

BOUNTIFUL is applicable only to persons. A giver may be bountiful, but his gift cannot—it should be plentiful or large. "A bountiful shoe" is absurd.

FETCH expresses a double motion—a first from and then towards the speaker;" It is exactly equivalent to "go and bring, and ought not to be used in the of series bring alone.

CALCULATE, besides its sectional misuse for think or suppose, is sometimes, in the participial form calcula ed, put for likely or apt; "That nomination is calculated to injure the party." It is calculated (designed) to do no such thing, though it may be likely to do.

CITIZEN should not be used except when the possession of political rights is meant to be implied. Newspaper reporters have a bad habit of bringing it out on all occasions, when "persons," "men," or "bystander" would express their meaning much better.

COUPLE applies to two things which are bound together or united in some way. "A couple of apples" is incorrect—two apples is what is meant.

DIRT means filth, and is not synonymous with earth or soil. Yet people sometimes speaks of a dirt road, or of packing dirt around the root of trees they are setting.—They mean earth.

EXECUTE.—When a murderer is hanged, his sentence is excuted—that is followed out or performed.

EXPECT looks away to the future. You cannot expect that anything has happened or is happening, but only that it will happen

GET means to obtain not to possess: "He has got all the numbers of the "Country Gentleman." "Have you got good molasses?" They have bad manners." Why will people persist in introducing the word in such sentences as these, were it so evidently is superfluous?

LOVE rules the heart, not the stomach.—You love your wife, or ought to; but favorite articles of food you like.

OBSERVE should not be used for say, as in the oft heard sentence, "What did you observe?"

We cannot to strongly condemn the Leader's attempted witticism respecting the "family affection" which prevented Mr. Blake from being present at the Grit demonstration in Simcoe. Coarse personalities of this kind or exceedingly objectionable. We denounce the Opposition journals for indulging in them so frequently; we trust that no Ministerial journals will follow their disreputable example. Mr. Blake's domestic affairs should be held sacred, never made the subject of public comment.—In absenting himself from the meeting, he has done as any man would do under similar circumstances.—Ottawa Times.

LOSS OF MONEY LETTERS.—The Globe of Tuesday last has in it a letter from Walkerton, from which we take the following;

"About the middle of may, 1870, the Durham mail bag was robbed on its way to Guelph, and considerable money was lost by the merchants who are in the habit of sending remittances in registered letters rather than pay the high tariff for a money order; not a word of it ever I saw in any Toronto or other paper. Mum's the word and all were mesmerized into silence. Very singularly, about the same day of the same month in this year, 18th or 19th May, 1871, the same game was played, and the Durham bag was again abstracted; and the money said to have been stolen is estimated at nearly one thousand dollars. A friend of mine lost $100 and feels very sore about it. Yet not a word in any public journal. Mum's the word. And why is this? Why is secrecy enjoined, and so scrupulously followed out? Is it because the post office authorities are afraid of shaking the public confidence in their irresponsible 'registered letter' department. It is quite time a few alterations were made in the post offices. If the department will not be responsible for registered letters, a new tariff should be made which would suit the increased money transit of the country, and should be framed on a scale so cheap as would express the whole amount now sent through registered letters.

THE DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER COMPLICATION IN AUSTRALIA.—The queen has been advised by the Government at home to legalize the marriage with a deceased wife's sister in South Australia, and the effect of the law will be this: A South Australian may lawfully have two wives at once, a deceased wife's sister in Australia and another woman in England. His marriage in Australia not being a recognised marriage here, an alliance with a second wife in England would be a valid marriage, and he would not be in liable for bigamy while in Australia his former wife's sister would be his lawful wife, and his English wife would be accounted his mistress only. The complications as to legitimacy and inheritance growing out of this strange state of things may be readily imagined. But if the other colonies should follow the example and make the same demand, as certainly they will, the consequences may be the most serious. For this reason alone, if for no other, the repeal of the prohibition must be adopted in England also. It will be impossible to maintain that which is right in Australia is wrong in England. —Law Times.

WHEAT:—The New York World, in a review of wheat market, notes the singular fact that wheat, which, in view of the necessities of France and Germany after the close of the war, was expected to rise in value, did just the reverse, having fallen 25 cents a bushel, and flour nearly $2 a barrel from the fall of Paris to this last of August. The cause of this decline was, not that the French did not want the wheat it was anticipated they would take, but that they were not able to pay for it. At length however, Continental demands began to make serious inroads upon English stocks; these have to draw on American supplies, and the price goes up again. The World says that the visible supply of wheat in the world is 20 per cent less than what it was a year ago; consequently farmers may be pretty certain that prices for a year to PETERBOROUGH, SEPT'R 28, 1871.

Editorial Items.

At Miss Selby's Concert on Monday evening, there was a very poor house, not more than six dollars were realised. What a shame for Peterboro that a few negro minstrels can draw crowded houses, while an educated lady of celebrity and talent can only induce 25 or 26 persons to go out to hear her.

We understand that the building of the Otonabee Bridge has been awarded to Messrs. White & Davis, of this Town, whose tender was $7000. The following are the different tenders.

Wm. Hamilton	$7.900
White & Davis	7.000
Wm. Helm	7.800
——per Mr. Croly	8.500
A man from Cayuga	6.650

VALUABLE PROPERTY FOR SALE:—We invite attention to the advertisement of J. W. Fitzgerald, Esq., in another column. Mr. F. is about leaving Peterboro, and offers for sale his very valuable and beautifully situated residence just outside the limits of the Town. This is a rare chance to secure a comfortable residence in one of the most beautiful situation around Peterboro.

The Rev. Mr. Thrall, of New York, has resigned his position in the Episcopal Church, and become somewhat inclined to set up in opposition to the church he has left. He has arranged a "Union Prayer Book," changed the "thirty-nine articles" to thirty one and attached eight of the commandments of Christ, it is said, to the ten commandments. We presume not as the commandments, but as commands of Christ. He refuses to call infant sprinkling baptism, but merely "Consecration of children to the Lord." This is considered dangerous innovation.

THE EAST RIDING SHOW will be held at WARSAW, on Thursday and Friday, 5th and 6th of October, next week. A better show than usual is anticipated, as this has been a favorable season on the whole. We hope the people of the East Riding will show proofs of it.

The West Riding Show will be held on the 13th and 14th of October.

The Otonabee Fall Show will be held on the 13th of October, at Keene.

South Monaghan Show will be held on the 12th of October, at Centerville.

Smith and North Monaghan on the 10th of October, at Bridgenorth.

APPOINTMENTS:—Mr. H. C. Rogers has received the appointment of postmaster in Peterboro—instead of collector of Inland Revenue as was anticipated. It is certain that Mr Rogers had the promise of the last mentioned office, but finding the postmaster about to resign, he resigned his claim on Excise and succeeded in gaining the postmastership.

The Sandfieldites are still in trouble; hungry office seekers are to be found in dozens on the corners, badgering the sitting member for the Commons to urge particular cases. Rumors too, are still afloat as to who is likely to be successful. With all our opposition to Mr. Perry, we really sometimes pitty him under present circumstances. He must often be in a strait to know what to do or advise.

In the mean time dame rumor says that Mr. Perry is about to get an office, but, of course, none but those in the secrets of the party can tell what office, although broad hints are given. In case Mr. Perry goes out of the way, Mr. W. H. Scott will be the candidate for the Commons in the West Riding, with a certainty of defeat: notwithstanding he is to try it.

The Montreal Witness says there are already counterfeits of the new Canadian fifty cents pieces in circulation. We were shown one to-day and the imitation that it would readily pass among others if not closely examined. They may be detected, however, by their light weight, and also by the lettering, which is not so clear and perfect as in the genuine ones. Counterfeit 25 cent pieces are also in circulation, so that there should be watchfulness in taking change in silver.

Sir Francis Hincks will have to issue more silver or more 25 cent bills, as change is now difficult to make.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN:—The above Society at Lakefield and vicinity opened a very handsome new Church at Lakefield, on Thursday and Sunday, 21st and 24th inst. The services throughout, we learn, were of a very interesting and profitable character, and, financially, a great success. An effective sermon was preached on Thursday, at 10.30 o'clock, by the Rev. W. S. Pascoe, of Bowmanville. Tea was served at 1p.m. to a large concourse of visitors. A public meeting was held in the afternoon, when excellent addresses were delivered by a number of Ministers. Sermons of an earnest and practical character were preached on Sunday to crowded audiences, by the Rev. W. Hooper, of Cobourg, and the Rev. T. Dyall, Baptist Minister, of Lakefield. The cost of the church was $1,350, all of which has been raised, with a balance of several hundred dollars to be appropriated towards paying for a recently purchased parsonage. The Church stands on a good site, presents a chaste and symmetrical appearance and is quite an ornament to the village. The success attending the erection of the Church and of purchasing the Parsonage, is largely due to the Rev. Mr. Rice, at present labouring in North Douro and Lakefield.

Peterborough Markets are unchanged

Wheat is bringing $1,05 to $1,25 in Port Hope;— from Guide Report.

TORONTO MARKETS:—Wheat from $1,16 to $1,28; Barley No. 1, 63 to 64 cents; Oats 38 to 40 cents; Peas about 60 to 65 cents.

Firewood is now $7.50 a cord in Toronto, with expectations of being dearer through the winter. Coal is selling at $7.50 a ton.

A COSTLY EMIGRANT.—Mr. Moylan, of Toronto, has been in Ireland a whole season, as Emigrant agent for the Dominion and in that time has succeeded in inducing one young lady, a milliner, to make Canada her home for a while. She must be something handsome, for she has cost the Dominion a handsome sum, keeping Mr. Moylan in Ireland to wheedle her away from her native country.

NEW CHEMO-RAND PATENT LAWS.— We are indebted to Munn & Co., publishers of the Scientific American, New York, for a neat, little bound volume of 120 pages, entitled as above. It contaiines complete Census of 1870, showing the Population, by Countries of all the States and Territories, with their Areas, and the Population of the principal Cities. Also, the new Patent Laws in full, with Forms, Official Rules, Directions how to obtain Patents Copyrights Regulations for Trade-Marks Assignments how to sell Patents, etc. Water-Wheels, Steam-Engines, and other mechanism with many useful tables and recipes, 175 diagrams of Mechanical Movements, etc. We advise every body to send for it as above. Price 25 cents. A more valuable compendium, for so small a price has rarely been published.

YOUNG LADIES' BEWARE:—A young lady named Florence Mitchell, a school teacher in the parish of Ballachulish, county of Inverness, was tried and found guilty of giving a false return of her age to the Census enumerator. She stated she was 29 years of age, but at her trial it was proven she was baptised on the 10th of Feby., 1827, and as the Sheriff believed few children were baptised before they were born. Miss Mitchell was held 44 years of age, and found guilty of making a false return, and was fined £1 sterling. Young ladies of Inverness must be careful in stating their ages.

Mr. Laidlaw, the champion of narrow guage railways, has received from the Toronto and Nipissing, and the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway Companies, the handsome gift of $12,500 each, and a pass for self and family during their natural lives—very liberal on the part of the companies for Mr. L's services. This brings to our mind the saying of a railway man in regard to opposition he was receiving: "Never mind," says he, "as soon as money begins to move opposition will cease." Money obtains advocates of systems and schemes which are calculated to ruin the people and sink corporations in everlasting debt.

PERSONAL.—We are now assured that Mr. Carver who so long (28 years) has filled the office of Postmaster in Peterboro, has resigned, and that Mr. H. C. Rogers has received the appointment. Mr. Carver, we know, has been considered by the Government a very efficient officer, and at present has letters from the Post Master General, expressing thanks for the efficient manner in which he has discharged the duties of the office. For our part we have always found Mr. Carver obliging and attentive to the work of his office. And we sincerely wish that he may long enjoy his retirement. That Mr. Carver is a Conservative in politics and held his appointment from and under a Conservative Government, in which we have no confidence, does not prevent our good wishes for his health and happiness, nor does it prevent us from giving Mr. Carver that meed of praise his obliging and gentlemanly conduct has deserved. Our only wonder is that Mr. Carver does not retire on a pension, as he informs us he does not expect a six pence. We cannot say why Custom House officers, or collectors of Inland Revenue should receive a pension, while postmasters retire without any.

Election Petitions.

WEST YORK: Mr. Patterson, the member declared elected was a postmaster, but resigned before nomination, but his resignation was not accepted till after that day. Part of the matter in dispute is, when did he cease to be postmaster? assuredly when relieved by accepting his resignation, for up to that period he only would be accepted as postmaster in communication with the post office department.

SOUTH GREY:—Lander's case is acknowledged to be the worst case that has been brought before the Judges. It is believed that Lander will be unseated.

MONCK.— in this county the wrong voters list was used in one township, and the matter thus hangs on this:—It is left to the Court to decide whether the election in such a case was legal. If legal in this case then a wrong list may be used to suit party purposes in some other county, when two or three votes may decide the election, and in this way defeat the peoples' wishes. It may be hard to put the county to the cost of a new election, but, better to do that than establish a dangerous precedent.

NORTH YORK:—Mr. Boultbee, who had three votes over Mr. McMurrich, is very ill, and, in consequence, a postponement has been consented to.

STORMONT:—The election has been declared void by consent of both parties, and a new election will take place in that county with almost certainty for the election of a reform candidate

TORONTO:—In both the Divisions the members elect seem to be innocently compromised by the action of over zealous friends. The result of the trial is not yet known. It may be that the Judge will declare both seats vacant. If not both vacant, both members will retain their seats, in all probability.

PRINCE EDWARD:—The trial has not yet come off, hence we need not anticipate results.

WELLAND is in the same state.

So far the Government has gained nothing by the trials, but in the case of Stormont Grey and West York and Monck, are almost sure to lose. John Sandfield and his followers feel the certainty of defeat when the House meets, and, hence their great haste to fill offices before the present holders have resigned.

Wire pulling, just now, is receiving due attention.

The Grand Junction Railway.

Our readers will learn from a letter in last week's Examiner that Mr. John Fowler is now on the track of the Grand Junction and expects to be at work in a few days, say about two or three weeks. To-day the stock will be allotted, and, as Mr. Fowler intends taking $100,000 in stock, he may be said to be on a fair way to get the construction of the road and a lease of it for some years. We never had much faith in the Belleville enterprise; the citizens have shown too great a dread of touching their pockets. The very idea that Belleville could only be induced to vote a bonus of $100,000 for the road, was almost enough to induce us to consider the whole thing as not likely to succeed. Mr. Fowler, however, is a railway man and understands how to manage those little things, and he may succeed in arousing those half-dead-and-alive creatures to do something. We must wait, however, till we learn that all things have been arranged fairly, and that Mr. Fowler has got his writings signed, before we become sanguine of anything being done except a little talk.

The Cobourg road is also talked of but not much done yet. The way Cobourg should have done was, go to work and re open the road to Peterboro at once—for this no new charter was required, by that time a charter for extension might be secured, and then proceed with the road to the Lakes and Fenelon Falls. As matters are at present, we cannot say which road is likely to secure the support of the people interested, but it generally is the case that the first in the field wins the choice of the grounds; and, if the Grand Junction people should through Mr. Fowler succeed in getting their road first on the way, the hopes of resuscitation to the Cobourg road will become somewhat indefinite.

By next issue we will be able to learn what Mr. Fowler is able to do in the Grand Junction scheme. The interests of many of the people of Peterboro will be equally well served by the Grand Junction as by the Cobourg road, and the first road that can be secured, always secures the influence of at least a number whose opposition endangers the success of any other rival scheme. We expect to hear in a few days what has been done at Belleville, and then we may be better able to divine future prospects.

New Registry Offices.

Not long since we were treated to some choice epithets in regard to a Registry office at Strathroy, which John Sandfield would not listen to because Strathroy could show nothing done for him. He is going on in his work of creating offices and filling them. The Mitchell Advocate says:—

"In spite of the remonstrances of Downie, Mitchell, and other municipalities within the limits of the South Riding of Perth, the Hon. John Sandfield has divided this county for Registration purposes, the new office to be located in St. Mary's. The county council will be asked at their next meeting to provide the necessary building, and we suppose the whole municipality will also have to foot the cost of furnishing books, copying deeds, &c. Who the Registrar is to be is not yet made public. We presume, however, it will be a St. Mary's man as our friends of the "stone town" seem determined to monopolize everything.

What is being done in Perth may soon be heard of as being done in Peterboro' County. Norwood has lately become the hub of this section of country, and, of course, deserves well of John Sandfield for services rendered, and, we understand, some one in the East expects a snug corner in a new Registry office as soon as possible. Who may be the successful "wire puller" few yet know, but he must have done something for Sandfield, before receiving favors. Notwithstanding that we wish the people of Norwood well, we hope John S. will not so far loose his reason as to place a Registry office so far out of the way. It could only serve Belmont, Lyndhurst and half of Dummer, and for all the Registries required for those two and a half Townships, it would be sheer folly to force upon the county the cost of a building, and on the country the yearly salary of an occupant. A good many people say, nonsense, John Sandfield will attempt nothing so foolish as a Registry office at Norwood. Doubtful! John Sandfield will do anything that he may imagine will insure a little done for him, foolish or otherwise.

Manitoba.

This new province does not appear to have fallen into the best hands possible, in its infancy. Governor Archibald, as a politician, was trained in an extravagant school, where the emoluments of office were more sought after than the good of the Country. He took with him to the west, the same ideas of extravagance and partizanship. He placed himself under the control of those who are believed to be the enemies of the Province; the supporters and admirers of Riel, and in consequence the loyal and peaceful citizens feel that they are unjustly dealt with, and that men, the most incapable, have been pitched into offices for which they were completely unfit. The Governor permitted his Cabinet to retain office in face of direct votes of want of confidence, but this he had learned from the perpetrators of the Double Shuffle, from those men who at any cost have retained office for the salaries' sake

At the passing of the act receiving Manitoba into the Confederation, the population was set down at 17,000 souls, young and old, Whites and Indians. The salaries of Government officials amount to $29,285.00, for taking care of 17,000 people, a little more than twice as many souls as the population as the Town of Peterboro.'

The expenditure of the Manitobian Government for one year will be $32,685, while their income is $30,220.24, and hence at the end of the first year of office the Provinces will be in debt $2,514.76. This is the way the Western Province of Manitoba closes its first year's work. No wonder that the loyal settlers are anxious for an increase of population from Ontario, so that they may be able by an overwhelming representative vote, to compel the creatures of John A. McDonald and Cartier to desist from wasting the people's money in purchasing retention of office. But nothing short of a radical change at Ottawa, the centre, will ever affect the provinces. Let the Manitobans send men to Ottawa who will vote right, and then they may hope for better things.

Town Council.

The Council met on Monday evening.

Present—the Mayor and Messrs. Smith, Stevenson, Toole, Morrow, Hopkins, Lundy, Rutherford and Edmison.

The minutes of the last meeting were read over and confirmed.

The Clerk stated that last week an election was held in the east ward, for a councillor in place of Mr. Dennistoun, resigned, and that Daniel Hopkins, Esq., was duly returned, and that he had made and deposited the requisite certificates of qualification and office.

A communication was received from Mr. W. A. Scott asking the Council to construct an entrance to his residence on Dalhousie street. From Thomas McBurney asking the Council to assist in sending James Moore to Toronto, he having an incurable complaint. From W. Pratt, asking for a saloon license.

The petition of Mr. McBurney was received. That of Mr. Pratt was referred to the committee on License, and subsequently referred to the Inspector.

Accounts from Mr. Thos. Paul for $31, and from Blake, Kerr and Bethune for $50, were referred to the Committee on finance.

The Mayor, as a member of the Joint committee on the bridge, gave a verbal report as to the progress made, the committee having agreed to accept Whyte & Davis' tender at $7,000, it being the best.

Moved by Mr. English, seconded by Mr. Lundy,—That the Street Inspector be authorized to make an entrance on Dalhousie street, to Mr. Scott's premises, the cost not to exceed four dollars.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Rutherford,—That the Committee on the Otonabee Bridge be and they are here by directed to proceed with the erection of the Bridge, and the Mayor is hereby directed to execute the proper contract, on behalf of the Council, in connection with the County, with the contractor to whom the contract was awarded by the joint committee.—Carried.

The following report of Finance Committee was read and submitted:

The Finance Committee beg leave to recommend payment of the following:—

Dr. Kincaid, holding inquest on late fire	$30 00
Dr. Kincaid, for attending Hood	5 00
L. Pappa, drawing water for fire	3 00
Robert White, team to Rice Lake and Port Hope	12 00

Your committee, however, remarks that the account forwarded by Dr. Kincaid does not contain the explanations or information which coroners are required by law to furnish; before being allowed their charge for services in connection with fire inquisitions. They recommend, therefore, that he furnish such information to the clerk in writing before being paid the amount of this account.

Respectfully submitted.
IVAN O'BEIRNE.
Chairman.

The report was received and adopted.

Mr Toole, as chairman of the street and bridge Committee, read and committed a report.

After some discussion, on motion, the Council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Edmison in the chair, a question arising, on motion the committee arose without reporting.

On motion of Mr. Stevenson, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, a By-law for appointing a collector was read a first time.

The By law was read a second and third time and passed.

Mr. Toole read a report on appointments to office, recommending Mr. Cummings as collector, it was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Toole, seconded by Mr. Morrow,—That a certain motion, moved by Mr. Smith, seconded by Mr. Lundy, and passed on the 14th of April, forbidding the expenditure of money in compliance with applications relating thereto, be and is hereby rescinded.—Lost.

Moved by Mr. Stevenson seconded by ——, That the sum of Thirty seven dollars and fifty cents be paid to Wm. Pratt as soon as the Mayor directs.

Carried on the following Divisions:—YEAS.—Messrs. Smith, Morrow, English, Lundy, Hopkins, Stevenson, Edmison, Toole.—NAYS.—Mr Rutherford.

Mr. Edmison gave notice of motion for improvements on Reid and Dorcas street.

Mr. Morrow gave notice of a motion providing for building a side walk on the south side of Hunter street, and Mr. Toole for improvements on the north side of Murray street.

The Council adjourned for one week.

The Musical Times published by J. P. Shaw, Rochester, comes regularly to hand. The September number contains an instrumental piece worth the number of the "Times"

The Hearth and Home commences a new story entitled—"The Horsier School-master" in this week's issue, which promises to be very entertaining. Orange Judd, is publisher of the Hearth and Home at 245 Broadway, New York.

BRUTAL ACT.— Sarnia Canadian says, a horse belonging to Mr. Slater of the 7th Con., of Nissouri, was mutilated in almost dastardly and brutal way, by having his tung cut out with some sharp instrument. The people of the neighbourhood are justly indignant and vow vengeance against the perpetrator, who has not yet been discovered. This is the second act of a similar nature that has occurred in that district within the last few weeks. We hope that on discovery and conviction the cowardly villain will meet with summary and severe justice.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.—Vicar-General Brugers summoned before the police court this morning, to answer an information laid by H. W. Babcock, charging him with solemnising martrimony unlawfully. By the treaty which ceded Canada to England by France, the rights of the Roman Catholic Church as they then existed, were to be preserved intact. They then exercised the power of marrying by dispensation, without license or banns, and have continued to do so up to the present time, it being claimed by the prosecution that the privilege is confined to Lower Canada, and cannot be legally adopted in Upper Canada. The matter is one of great importance to the Catholic clergy, and the decision in the matter will no doubt be looked for with much interst. Mr. H. McMahon appears for the defence, and the case was postponed untill the 6th of October next.—Herald.

Grand Junction R R

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR:—

Since I was at Peterboro last week I and my engineer, with Mr. Kelso, the President of the Grand Junction R. R. Co., have been over the route through the County of Hastings. I, therefore, wish to give the people of Peterboro my views of the scheme.

First it will be the shortest route from the Northern Pacific R. R. to the Eastern Markets, and that Peterboro will be the only town that it will touch between Georgian Bay and Belleville, giving Peterboro the advantage of supplying all the Lumbering District from Peterboro to the Georgian Bay. And if Peterboro wants the Haliburton R. R. there is no reason why the Grand Junction should not form part of that road to Bobcaygeon, just what the Cobourg R. R. Co. are applying for, and if the townships north to Haliburton, and the English Land Company will do their share in Bonuses, and $4,000 per mile from Government, there is no reason why the Haliburton R. R. should not go on at the same time the Grand Junction is. At least by making a commencement the Charter will be saved, and if you wait for the Cobourg R. R. Co. to get their charter, the Haliburton Charter will be run out, therefore, then there would be no Peterboro and Haliburton R. R. charter. These are a few of the advantages Peterboro will have, from the west and north, by the construction of the Grand Junction Railway.

Now, sir, for the advantages Peterboro would have East: in the first place: the grades are quite easy, a locomotive will be able to take 30 cars in a train over the Grand Junction to Belleville, easier than it would 15 over the Port Hope or Cobourg roads, therefore the tariff over the Grand Junction to Belleville will not be more for wheat, flour, lumber and merchandise, than it is, or ever will be, over the Port Hope or Cobourg roads. There will be no harbor dues at Belleville for lumber or anything else going or coming over the Grand Junction R. R. The lumber can be taken from Belleville to Oswego for 50 cents per thousand, where it costs a dollar from Cobourg or Port Hope to Oswego, therefore, I feel confident I shall get all the lumber and square timber that is manufactured between Peterboro and Georgian Bay, which will not be less than 100 millions feet sawn lumber, and 4 million feet square timber a year, that will be business for 10 trains a day for 6 months in the year, in lumber and timber alone, and for other business I estimate 3 trains daily, summer and winter. The time to run a train from Peterboro to Belleville will not be longer than it takes a train to run to Port Hope, as the line will be a similar line to the Millbrook branch in grades, where the 13 miles are frequently run in 20 minutes. Now, Sir, I feel proud in having the Millbrook branch to refer to, where it was said I could not make a railway, and that it would all wash away in the spring of the year, it has not washed away, and if the whole road to Port Hope was the same as the Millbrook branch the trains could be run in half the time they are, and for half the expense.

The wheat and other grains that go over the Grand Junction R. R. to Belleville, for the Montreal market, can be put on board of the barges that now come up to Kingston, which will, when the Grand Junction R. R. is completed, come up to Belleville, thereby saving the shipping on Lake Ontario, and the transhipping from vessels to the barges at Kingston, which will be of great advantage to the wheat buyers and the millowners, in sending their wheat and flour to Montreal market from this section of the Country, and, also, the Merchants will have a great advantage in getting their merchandise from Montreal over the Grand Junction R. R. as the distance from Peterboro to Belleville is the same as from Port Hope to Belleville, that is about 51 miles.

Passengers going from Peterboro to Montreal by the Grand Junction R. R. will save two hours in time as well as 31 miles over the Port Hope road, which they now have to go, and I, also, save their dollar, which they have to pay by going to Port Hope.

Now, Sir, if all these advantages could be got, it will be something gained for Peterboro, and I think that you will give me credit for bringing before the people of Peterboro a scheme more tangible than any thing I have done heretofore.

Next Thursday the private stock will be allotted to the subscribers, 15 days after that the Board of Directors will be elected, the lease signed, and then I commence operations with all my might.

Yours truly,
JOHN FOWLER.

The ratepayers of Barrie, by a majority of two to one, have rejected a by-law to raise money to purchase a steam fire engine.

The Port Hope Times says:—We are requested, by J. J. Tilley, Esq., Town Inspector of Schools, to state that under the new School Act, Inspectors are forbidden to give either teachers or trustees notice of their visits.

A Guelphite named Henry Wood, employed in the Fergus Sewing Machine factory, attempted suicide in the Grand River on Wednesday last, but experienced a vexatious failure in consequence of low water. He is now patiently awaiting the fall rains.

A GREAT OFFER.—Peters Musical Monthly for October is to hand, containing fifteen beautiful pieces of music, printed from full size music plates. It can be had for thirty cents. The Publisher also offers to send, post-paid, for one dollar, six back numbers, containing from ninty to one hundred pieces of choice new music, worth at the least $30. Send your order to the publisher, J. L. Peters, 599 Broadway, New York, and our word for it, you will get your money's worth

Word reached here yesterday afternoon of a very serious trouble in which a number of volunteers at the Sarnia Camp have involved themselves. If the circumstances related be true, they are to be execrated by all civilized people. But it is much to be hoped that the story put in circulation, and which concerns the good name of the 23rd Battilion of Oxford, as well as the liberty of over a dozen of its members, it is greatly exaggerated, if not altogether untrue. It is said that these men on Thursday last criminally abused a little girl of twelve years of age to such an extent she has since died of the injuries inflicted; and that seven persons are now in custody on suspicion of having been directly or indirectly concerned in the crime.—London Free Press.

2. Resolve $a^{10} - y^{10}$ into its elementary factors. (Text book)
3. Divide by Horner's synthetic method, $6a^4 - a^3 + 2a^2 + 13a + 4$ by $2a^2 - 3a + 4$. (Text book)
4. (a) Prove that the L. C. M. of two algebraical expression is their product divided by their G. C. D. Does this rule hold for more than two expressions? Illustrate.
   (b) Find the L. C. M. of $a^3 - 9a^2 + 26a - 24$, and $a^3 - 8a^2 + 19a - 12$ (Text book.)
5. Prove that $x^m - 1$ is divisible by $x - 1$ without remainder, m being a whole number.
6. Solve the following equations:

$$(a)\ \frac{5m}{3} - \frac{2x}{7} = \frac{6(1-3m)(x-1)}{7} - \frac{20m+1}{4} = 0.$$

$$(b)\ \frac{5}{x} + \frac{12}{y} = 37 \quad 0, \text{ and, } \frac{1}{5x} - \frac{1}{12y} = \frac{1}{2}$$

8. Two men A and B, dig a trench in $33\frac{1}{3}$ days. If A were to do more work by one third than he does, and B more work by one half than he does, they would dig the trench in $25\frac{5}{6}$ days. In what time would each dig it alone, at his present rate of work?

IV. Mention historical associations connected with the following places, giving dates where you can:—Corunna, Augsburg, Granada, Fontenoy, Thorn, Torbay, Shrewsbury, Meerut, Medina, Sinope, Chatenguar, Hartford.

The Manitoba Liberal says:

Typhoid fever is very prevalent here just now, there being some fifteen cases in town. (Winnipeg.)

The imports of spirituous liquors into Manitoba foot up to 29,606 gallons, having a value of $25,605.99, and paying to the amount of $7,425.69. This is for seven months. Large quantities of beer and whiskey are also manufactured in the Province. They need Cough up there.

Potatoes are abundant at 50c a bushel, onions $2 a bushel, cabbage 8c a head. Not much doing in grain.

At the examination for school teachers for the Protestant schools, which was held on Tuesday and Wednesday last, there was but one candidate, Mr. John Francis, who gained a certificate of the first grade.

A number of men have lately left the police force.

The crops at the Portage are all in, and average thirty-five bushels to the acre.

The "Manitoban" thinks old country emigration is essential to the prosperity of the North-West. Very likely. It is quite evident that emigrants from Ontario are not the sort to suit either the "Manotiba" or Gov. Archibald.

WHEAT:—The New York World, in a review of wheat market, notes the singular fact that wheat, which, in view of the necessities of France and Germany after the close of the war, was expected to rise in value, did just the reverse, having fallen 25 cents a bushel, and dour nearly $2 a barrel from the fall of Paris to the 1st of August. The cause of this decline was, not that the French did not want the wheat it was anticipated they would take, but that they were not able to pay for it. At length however, Continental demands began to make serious inroads upon English stocks; these have to draw on American supplies, and the price goes up again. The World says that the visible supply of wheat in the world is 20 per cent less than what it was a year ago; consequently farmers may be pretty certain that price for a year to will come rule high. This will be good news to the farmers of Ontario, for, while most other crops have suffered from heat and drouth, one unvarying story of good wheat comes from all parts of our Province. So, if the hay is short, and the fruit poor as I scare, and other crops but indifferent, our plentiful wheat with good prices for the grain, will enable our Agriculturists to smile at indifferent success in other articles of farm produce.

THE DISTURBANCES IN ROME.—Accounts have appeared of the disturbances at Rome on the 23rd and 24th ult. On the former date the Pope had reigned exactly as long, day for day, as St. Peter. His partizans determined to celebrate this event by a special service at St. John Lateran. By way of counter demonstration the Liberals assembled outside the church, and when the congregation came out, waved tri-colored flags and shouted "Long live Victor Emmanuel!" The police, however, interfered dispersed the crowd, and the day's proceedings ended, On the morrow the Papal demonstration was continued, a special service taking place at the Church of the Jesuits in the square of the Minerva. A crowd collected outside the building, but it was dispersed by the police and some persons were arrested. Among these was a Roman named Tognetti, whose brother was executed under the Papal regime for participation in a revolutionary movement. As soon as this became known another crowd formed, which went to the head police office and clamored for Tognetti's release. Thereupon the police sallied out, and a collision with the people, occurred in which shots were fired. Three persons were wounded and on the following morning one of them died. It is feared that owing to the bad feeling which prevails between the clericals and the people, more blood will be shed in similar collisions, if great prudence and tact be not displayed by the authorities.

The question of securing the St. Helen island as a pleasure ground for Montreal is being vigorously agitated in that city. The island would be a valuable acquisition to to the Canadian metropolis and one of the most pleasant retreats from the summer heat and dust of the city which would possibly be found within any reasonable distance.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Physicing Horses.

Many persons physic their horses frequently—especially every spring. This is a great error, and one which has caused the loss of many valuable horses; as it is usually given, often produces inflammation of the bowels Which generally proves fatal; it also weakens the horse and thus renders him more liable to disease, or less able to throw it off—what is required in a medicine which will operate gently upon the bowels, and act upon the liver and lungs, removing all obstructions therefrom, purifying the blood and enabling all the organs to do their work without overtaxing any, which is accomplished by the of "Barleys Condition Powder and Arabian Heave Remedy"—it is always safe and certain. Remember the name and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package—Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle Ont. proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

I have used Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites freely in my practice, both in dis, &c., of the t, as consumption and Bronchitis, or a d in Infantile diseases of the prima passages Stomach and Bowels, with eminent success, considering it superior to any similar preparation yet off red to the public.

CHANDLER CRANE, M. D., Halifax, N. B.

BRYAN'S WARNER, (The great public remedy,) have now been in use over twenty years, hence it cannot be said they are on trial. They have been thoroughly tried, and pronounced (on the authority of those who lives and health they have) to be a cure, harmless and eminently salutary preparation, and if taken in season will invariably cure colds, coughs; sore throat, and all Bronchial affections. One fair trial will convince the most skeptical.—Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25 cts. per box.

TWO DOLLARS.—First to eat a hearty supper for the pleasure expressed during the brief time it takes to wash down the throat, at the expence of a wet six night of disturbed sleep, and a weary waking in the morning. Second, to try all the remedies in existence for rheumatism, pains in the back and sides, coughs colds, cramps spasms bruises &c., before trying the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." Sold by all medicine dealers at 25 cts. per bottle

A Distressing Cough causes the friends of the sufferer almost as much pain as the sufferer himself, and should receive immediate attention. Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry speedily cures coughs, colds, influenza, sore throat, &c. It will always relieve consumption, and in many well attested cases it has effected a perfect cure.

We would not recommend the frequent or constant use of any medicine. It is important to take even a good article judiciously. Parsons Purgative Pills are safe prompt and reliable laxative or catartic.

Base ball is undoubtedly good exercise and capital amusement, but it often occasions bunged eyes, broken shins and blistered hands. We can tell you that in all such cases if Johnsons Anodyne Liniment is resorted to, it will reduce the swelling and stop the pain.

BREAKFAST.—EPPS'S COCOA. Grateful and comforting. By a through knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately, flavoured beverage which may save us many a doctors' bill."—Civil Service Gazette. made simply with Boiling Water or Milk. Each packet labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Milky Cocoa (Cocoa and Condensed Milk).

Genius and Labour.—Alexander Hamilton once said to an intimate friend: "Men give me some credit for genius—but all the genius I have lies just in this—when I have an subject in hand, I study it profoundly, and day and night it is before me—I explore it in all its bearings, and my mind becomes pervaded with it." Now a great deal of study has been bestowed upon the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" to make it what it is—the first of pain removing agents, and the best medicine for the cure of colds coughs rheumatism, summer complaints. &c. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per bottle

TWO QUARRIES EASILY ANSWER.—Why should men wear boards? Because they are a great protection to the throat and lungs, and add much to their personal appearance. Why should we use "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers?" Because when used for coughs, colds, tickling in the throat, hoarseness, &c.; ther act like a charm. Ministers and Lawyers use them, physicians recommend them and singers and public speakers say they are the very best medicine in existence for the cure of such complaints Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25 cts. per box.

Husband:—You have great faith, Mary, in the PAIN-KILLER. The Parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are very, positive in favour of it, but I am inclined to think that if it did all it professes to do sickness and death would soon be out of fasion. for it cures everything.

Wife:—The parson's wife and Mrs. Judge Jones are not the only ones that I have heard recommend the PAIN-KILLER, every where I go they have it and everybody praises it, all the Liniments, Cholera mixtures and pain medicines have disappeared since Perry Davis' agent came around, (To little boy) George does your tooth still ake my dear?

George:—No Mother pain killer stoped it.—

Wife to Husband: The PAIN-KILLER does not profess to cure everything either in the Pirabout the bottle or the "Annual," I have read them over carefully. It claims to be the best medicine in existence. Perry Davis & Son do not say what it can do, but proves what it has done by giving certificates from reliable persons whos testimony cannot be doubted.

Husband:—Do you think those certificates are Bona fide, I believe they are made up to sell the goods.

Wife:—Judge Jones was so incredulous a till he wrote to Perry Davis & Son and was satisfied, they sent him a quire of certificate recived from parties within five miles of his own house.

Economy in Health and Physic is as important as in business, and we know of no cheaper, better, or surer means of preserving health and divesting the sick of their infirmities, than through the medium of Dr. Radway's famous medicines. We present a case in point:

CASE 1. 230.—Marcus W. Mount, long a sufferer from liver complaints, has paid, he says, at different times, about $250 to physicians, and he thinks as much more for medicines. Is induced to try Radway's Pills, with occasional doses of the Renovating Resolvent, to assist in removing from his system the effects of the mercurial treatment to which he has been subjected. Soon feels the benefit of the change Takes, in all, five boxes of the Pills and three bottles of the Resolvent, and at the end of the course is "as well as ever he was in his life."

I have a son of five years old now, who took the "Ready Relief" when 4 months old, as he suffered from some irregularity in the bladder, preventing him from making urine. The following was the treatment:—20 drops of "Relief" in a cup of water, and divide into portions of a tablespoon, which he took every ten minutes which cured him. He has since had colic, which I treated in the same way, and also rub the stomach with it (pure.

A By-law to raise, by way of loan, the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars for purposes therein mentioned.

WHEREAS the Municipal Council of the Village of Ashburnham, in the County of Peterborough, has resolved to raise by way of loan the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars for the purpose of enlarging the School House in the said Village, and to assist in paying for a Fire Engine for the Town of Peterborough, to be used for both Municipalities.

And whereas, to carry into effect the said objects it will be necessary for the said Municipal Council to raise by way of loan the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred Dollars.

And, whereas, it will require the sum of Two Hundred and Three Dollars [$203 00] to be raised annually by special rate for the payment of said debt, or loan, and interest, as also hereinafter mentioned,

And, whereas, the amount of the whole rateable property of the said municipality, irrespective of any future increase of the same, and also irrespective of any temporary investment of the sinking fund hereinafter mentioned or any part thereof, according to the last revised Assessment Rolls of the said municipality is One Hundred and Sixteen Thousand Two Hundred and Twenty-nine dollars, [$116,229]

And, whereas, the existing debt of the said Village of Ashburnham is nothing, [$0 00] and there is nothing in arrears for principal or interest.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

This dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of Scrofulous disease, whose the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were aggravated by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the contagion undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of confirmed or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Tic, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterine affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Uterine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the same sinking poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing Spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

The Scourge of the Tongue

BY LIMA LEE.

'Tis a fearful scourge—the scourge of the tongue,
When it breathes with its poisonous breath,
As it does alike on the high and low,
Bringing sorrow, and ruin, and death.
Nor worth nor station can guard its approach,
Nor innocence ward off its rage—
It tramples on all, both the false and the true,
Irrespective of wisdom or age.

The heart it has broken—the tear it has cost—
The attempt to count them were vain
For peace and contentment flee its approach,
And misery walks in its train.
Oh, how many a needless sorrow it brings
To this sin-blighted world of ours—
How many an otherwise useful life
Has been wrecked by its blighting power.

And is there no cure for this merciless scourge
No relief from it its venomed sting?
Must it ever pursue its cruel work,
Going forth as an unfitted thing?
We have sometimes thought it might be helped
If we all would the receipt heed:
It is simply this—mind the Golden Rule—
None other relief shall we need.

The Two Answers; or, The Noble Resolve.

"No Charles,—it cannot be. As a friend I shall respect and esteem you; but I cannot be your wife. Have compassion on me, but do not press me further."

Mary Granville stood before me as she thus spoke, with her hands clasped, and her head bowed, trembling like an aspen; and I fancied that there was a tear in her eyes. She was a beautiful girl; and I had thought her as good and as pure as she was beautiful; and, further than this, I had believed she loved me. She was an orphan, and had been engaged during the past ten years in teaching one of our village schools.

Of her early I had known nothing, save that she had been well educated, and had moved in good society; and I had reason to believe that at some time her parents had been wealthy; but her father had failed in business; and it had been told that the sad reverse had killed him. I had known that Mary was poor—that she was dependent upon her daily labor for support—and the thought that I could offer her a comfortable home, with the advantages of moderate wealth, had given increase to my prospective happiness. But this unexpected answer had dashed all my hopes to the ground.

"Do you mean," I cried, vehemently, "that you dismiss me? Am I cast off!"

"I cannot be your wife!" was her reply.

"Then," said I with more warmth than I might have displayed under other circumstances, "I leave you to yourself, and while I strive to shake off the love that has bound me to you, I will only hope that ere you lead another into your net, you will keep him after you have caught him!"

She gazed upon my face with a painful, frightened look; but I did not stop to hear her speak further. While she stood there pale and trembling, I turned and left the house.

I remarked that under other circumstances I might have been more cool and collected in my speech; and what do you suppose, dear reader, the attending circumstances were? I will tell you candidly. I was a little heated with wine. I had drank just enough to warm my blood, and give to the brain an extra impulse: and my words were not chosen as I would have chosen them had the spirit of wine been absent. As I walked towards my home I sought to persuade myself I had fortunately escaped the snares of a coquette, and that I might be better satisfied thus to reason, I stopped at the hotel where I found a few of my companions, and helped to dispose of half a dozen bottles of wine.

On the following morning I woke with a headache, and when I called to mind the events of the proceeding evening I was anything but happy. I began to realise how much I had loved Mary Granville. There was an aching void in my heart, and I fairly wept as I contemplated my loss. It was my love, and its influence had permeated every fibre of my being. The beautiful girl had become more dear to me than I could tell, and I groaned in bitter anguish when I thought that she was lost to me forever. I had resolved that I would feel very angry and indignant; but when the sweet face was called up to mental view, such feelings melted away, leaving me sad and desolate.

On the following Sabbath I attended church, where I saw Mary once more. She played the organ as she had done for years past, and her fingers now swept over the keys I fancied that I could detect a tremulousness which I had never noticed before. Was it only my imagination, or was there really a plaintiveness a sadness in the expression of her music? to me it seemed as though, at times, the organ groaned and wept. It was like the wailing of the daughter of Zion by the rivers of Babylon. When the services was over, and we went out from the church, I saw Mary's face. It was pale and wan, as though she had been sick. What could it be? Was she suffering as I suffered? the thought flashed upon me that some one had been telling her something to my disadvantage. I had enemies in the village—enemies who envied me because I had inherited some wealth; and I fancied, enemies who envied me the love of Mary Granville.

Another week passed, and I became more sad and lonesome. My business was irksome to me, and my books and papers afforded me no respite. In fact I could not read, for my mind was never upon the page before me. Another Sabbath at the church and I saw Mary again. It seemed to me that she was paler than before, and her eyes looked as though she had been weeping.

During the succeeding week I received a visit from my old college chum, Jack Stanton, who had just opened a law office in Berryville. After supper, as we sat in my cosy parlor smoking our cigars, I suggested that a bottle of wine might not be amiss. Jack shook his head.

"No Charley," he said, "we'll leave the wine for those who need it."

"You used to drink Jack."

"Yes; but it never did me any good."

"And do you think it ever did you any harm?"

"As for that I will not say; but my boy I will tell you what I can say: It never should do me any harm! I know it has harmed others who where as strong as I am. By the way, Charley, isn't Mary Granville here."

"Yes," said I.

"Do you know her?"

I turned away my face and pretended that I heard something at the window.

"I have seen her," I replied, when I had composed myself. "She plays the organ in our church."

"She and I were schoolmates," pursued Stanton, "and speaking of wine brings her to my mind. Do you know anything of her early life?"

"Nothing," I answered.

"Poor Mary! I never think of her without my resolution of total abstinence grow stronger and stronger. When we were school-children together her father was the richest man in Berryville, and she and her brother were the happiest of the happy. Mr. Granville was in the habit of drinking wine, and the habit grew on him until he could not live without his brandy. He was of a social disposition, and in time it came to pass that he was grossly intoxicated. Of course under such circumstances, one of two things must happen: the man must reform, or he must sink. Mr. Granville did not reform, and ere many years he died a drunkard's death, leaving his family to poverty and suffering. Thomas, the son, who was four years older than Mary became very dissipated, at the age of eighteen was killed in a street fight in New York.

Mrs. Granville survived her husband but a few months, absolutely dying of a broken heart. Poor Mary thus left fatherless and motherless without brother or sister, at the age of fifteen, was forced to earn the bread she ate and nobly has she done it. It you know her Charley, you know one of the grandest women that ever lived. But—what is the matter? Why bless me you look as pale as a ghost."

I struggled with my self, and told Jack I had swallowed a lot of cigar smoke. I arose and opened one of the casements, and stepped out upon the balcony, where the fresh air partially restored me to my former self.

At a late hour Jack departed for the hotel, and when I had retired to my chamber I paced to and fro until long past midnight. I could no longer misunderstand the motives which had actuated Mary in rejecting my hand. She knew that I was in the habit of using wine, and on that evening when first we met she must have discovered that I had drunk enough to bring the false flush to my cheek.

"O, my God," I ejaculated as I sank into a chair, "may it not be that she feared to trust her life in my keeping. She suffered enough from the accursed cup. The night of sorrow had been long enough upon her. She would be worse than mad to take a husband whose opening pathway of life led to the pit into which the loved ones of other days had fallen.

"But," I asked myself why did she not tell me the whole truth."

I found no difficulty in answering the question. She had shrunk from wounding my feelings. I know how sensitive she was and I knew that she had been afraid of offending me. Perhaps she thought me proud and headstrong enough to resent such liberties on her part; and perhaps she imagined that I might look up on her course as the offering of her hand in consideration of my renouncing the wine cup, and that I might spurn said offer.

On Friday Jack Stanton left me, and on Saturday evening I called a Mary's boarding place. Mary herself answered my summons. She started when she saw me, and I saw her hand move quickly to her heart.

'Mary,' said I, speaking very calmly, for I had a mighty strength of will to support me, 'I have not come to distress you. I have come as a friend, and I humbly ask that you will give me audience for a few minutes.'

She went into the parlor, and I followed her, closing the door behind me; and when we were alone she set the lamp on the table and motioned me to a seat. 'No,' said I, 'I will not sit down yet. Give me your hands, Mary.

Mechanically she put forth her hands, and I took them in my own. There was a wondering look upon her face and a slight flush had come to her pale cheeks.

'Mary' I continued, speaking slowly and softly—and I knew that a moisture was gathering in my eyes—you must answer me one simple question. Answer it as you please, and take my solemn assurance that I only ask it for my good. Tell me—Do you love me? No, no—do not take your hands away yet. Answer me if you can. Fear not—O, fear not; for I would rather go forth unfriended night than do you wrong. Tell me, Mary—Do you love me?'

'I cannot speak falsely,' she tremblingly whispered; 'for my own peace perhaps I love you to well.'

'Listen to me one moment,' I added, drawing her nearer to me; 'and when I have told you what I have to tell you, you shall be the judge.'

She did not strive to free her hands; but she gazed up eagerly into my face, and her eyes became with a hopeful light.

'You know John Stanton?' I said.

'Yes,' she replied.

'He was my best friend while we were at college, and our friendship has not given less. He has been to see me, and he told the story of the trials and sufferings of one of the school mates of his earlier days. O, Mary, I think I know very well why you refused my hand, and I blame you not. It may be that our paths may be different through life; but you shall at least know that he whom you have loved will ever cherish that remembrance. I know that my feet have hitherto walked in the path of danger, but henceforth I am free from the dread snare. Under the new light that has dawned upon me, I hold the wine cup to be a fearful enemy, and I will shun it as I would a shameful life and a clouded death bed. For my own sake I will to this so that my sainted mother, if she can look down from heaven upon her boy, can smile approvingly upon the course he has chosen. And now, Mary, if at some future time you should feel that you could trust your happiness in my keeping, you will give me some token thereof, and I will come again and ask you for your hand; and should it be my blessed lot to receive it, I will devote every energy of my being to making your life a joyous and a happy one.'

I let go her hands, and I bowed my head to wipe away a tear. I had turned towards the door, really intending to depart and give her time for reflection, when she pronounced my name. I looked back, and her hands were stretched out towards me.

'Not now,' I whispered. 'I will not ask your answer yet. Watch me—prove me. Only give me to know that I have your love, and I will—'

I stopped speaking for Mary's head had been pillowed on my bosom, and she was weeping like a child.

'Now! Now!' she uttered, as I wound my arms about her. 'O Charles I never doubted your truth. I know you cannot deceive me. God bless you for your noble resolution; and let me help you to keep it!'

I cannot tell how long I stopped that evening. I can only tell that I was very happy, and that my prospects for the coming years were bright and glorious.

On the following day,—a Sabbath, calm and pleasant—the organ gave forth a new strain. The daughters of Zion were no longer in a strange land. They had taken their harps down from the willows, and within the chambers of the new Temple, more resplendent far than of old she sang the songs that had aforetime made joyous the city of their God. All marked the grandure of the music that sprang into life beneath the touch of the fairy organist on that beautiful Sabbath morning, and all seemed moved by the inspiration. To me it was like the holy outpourings of a redeemed soul, and with bowed head and folded hands I gave myself up to the sublime influence.

As Mary turned from the instrument I caught her eye. Mine was deep with moisture but hers was bright-beaming with glad seraphic light.

We went out from church together.

Ere many weeks had passed another hand pressed the keys of the organ, for Mary Granville was not in the choir. She knelt before the altar—knelt by my side—and over us both the aged clergyman stretched his hands with prayer and blessing.

Again we went out from the church together—Mary and I—out into the new life—bound heart to heart, and hand to hand, to love, honor and cherish forever.

Death of the Author of "Beautiful Snow."

A few ye ars ago there appeared in an American paper published in one of the Western States an exquisite poem, entitled "Beautiful Snow." The beauty of the composition secured its republication in numerous journals, and at length it found its way to England, accompanied by the tale that the original had been discovered upon the person of a young woman who was frozen to death in the streets of St. Louis. For a long time the author preserved his incognito, while numerous claimants sought to establish their right to its authorship and the honors appertaining thereto. Some one who knew the true history of the poem knew also the cause of its author's reticence in giving the name to the world. Some months since the secret was revealed, and Major Sigourney, nephew of the celebrated poetess of that name, became known as the writer. The April number of Harper's Magazine contains a companion poem, entitled, "Beautiful Child," which is marked by all the elegance of diction and deep religious feeling charactetistic of its predecessor. Who could have thought that in a few weeks its gifted author would fill a suicide's grave! Yet such is the case. We learn from an American contemporary that, on the night of April 22nd, Major W. A. H. Sigourney was found dead in the outskirts of New York, under circumstances leading to the belief that he had shot himself. He had in early life married a Miss——, a lady of great personal attractions, and with her made a voyage to Europe. During their absence rumors unfavorable to her character, reached the Sigourney family. The reports seem to have been well founded, for shortly after her return to New York she showed that the curse of the nineteenth century—the demon drink—had added one her name to the list of his victims. She abandoned her husband, became an outcast, and was next heard of as an inmate of the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island. Her husband's love was still sufficiently strong to induce him to make another effort to save her, and through his influence she was released, only again to desert her home. In the winter of 1863 the papers spoke of a young and beautiful woman having been found dead under the snow in a disreputable street in New York. Something seemed to tell Sigourney that the body was that of his wife. Upon making inquiries he found his surmises were but too true, and after claiming the remains he had them interred in that picturesque "silent city" which overlooks the busy harbor of New York. The story of that erring wife was told in the touching language of "Beautiful Snow." What wonder that he shunned the publicity that its authorship would have conferred! The Henry J. Raymond, then editor of the New York Times, was for years the friend of Major Sigourney, and obtained for him employment as a journalist, which failing health compelled him to abandon. The circumstances connected with his death remain a mystery. Not even his child, for whom he always displayed the tenderest affection, can throw any light upon it. The last effort of his genius displayed in the poem already referred to.

BEAUTIFUL CHILD.

"Beautiful child by the mother's knee,
In the mystic feature what will thou be?
A demon of sin or an angel sublime—
A poison Upas or innocent thyme—
A spirit of evil flashing down
With the lurid light of a fiery crown—
Or gliding up with a shining track,
Like the morning star that ne'er looks back
Dantiest dreamer that ever smiled,
Which will thou be, my beautiful child?

"Beautiful child in my garden bowers,
Friend of the butterflies, birds and flowers—
Pure as the sparkling crystalline stream,
Jewels of truth thy fairy eyes beam,
Was there ever a whiter soul than thine
Worshipped by love in a mortal shrine?
My heart thou hast gladdened for two sweet years
With rainbows of hope through mists of tears—
Mists beyond which the sunny smile
With its halo of glory beams all the while.

"Beautiful child, to thy look is given
A gleam serene, not of earth but heaven;
With thy tell-tale eyes and prattling tongue,
Would thou could'st ever thus be young.
Like the liquid strains of the mocking bird
From star to hall thy voice is heard;
How oft in the garden nooks thou'rt found,
With flowers thy curly locks around,
And kneeling beside me with figure so quaint
Oh! who would not dote on my infant saint!

"Beautiful child, what thy fate shall be
Perchance is wisely hidden from me;
A fallen star thou may'st leave my side
And of sorrow and shame become the bride—
Shivering, quivering, through the cold street
With a curse behind and before thy feet,
Ashamed to live and afraid to die;
No home, no friend, and a pitiless sky.
Merciful Father—my brain grows wild—
Oh! keep from evil my beautiful child!

"Beautiful child, may'st thou soar above,
A warbling cherub of joy and love;
A drop on eternity's sea;
A blossom on life's immortal tree—
Floating, flowering evermore
In the blessed light of the golden shore.
And as I gaze on thy sinless bloom
And thy radiant face, they dispel my gloom
I feel He will keep thee undefiled,
And His love protect my beautiful child."

The Dignity of Woman in her House.

Domestic—the ruling of a house—is goodly, noble, and most fruitful work. We have almost lost the mediæval about the beautiful aspect of a well ordered home. Woman, noble, cultivated, and even highly learned women, had in the old time the same pride in it which an author has it his book, an artist in his picture, a statement in the policy which orders the larger home of country or of a world. The smallest duties were made matters of study; the kitchen, the glass room, the dairy, the linen closet, all betrayed the touch of a wise, deft and cultivated hand. Time did not hang heavily on their hands, though there were no papers and magazines, as it does on the hands of our modern girls. See to the dignity of the domestic order. Let everything in the home bear the trace, not of servile, but of womanly work. Dignify the domestic details by giving thought to them. It is thought, wise thought, which dignifies and ennobles things. Make order, sweetness, purity pleasantness in the home sphere, and you will dignify as well as gladden your life. A girl with a daily service which is to bring order out of disorder, cosmos out of chaos, has no need to look with envy on the busiest life. She is training faculties which make order one day in a wider world.

I pity from my heart the girl to whom the home life and the home work is hateful; whose one desire and prayer is to escape from it; whose life is a perpetual thirst for excitement; who dangles herself before the eyes of men as a glittering prize which they must snatch to win. There is no escape for such an one from pain and weariness; life for her will be one long, discontented moan: and death will but usher out a useless soul into aimless eternity. Dignify the life of the house, I again say, by womanly work for it; fill it with the traces of the loving thought and care of a pure and cultivated nature; sit as a queen in a well-ordered, well-governed world. There are two ideal portraits painted out at full length in the Scripture. The one is the portrait of a patriarch in his tribe; the other is the portrait of a woman in her home. Let us read the last—PROVERBS xxxi, 10—31.

Convenient Home Directions.

CLEANING LACE CURTAINS.—Wash, starch, and stretch; then pin them to your carpet, first taking care to have the carpet swept very clean.

TO TELL GOOD EGGS.—Put them in water; if the butts turn up they are not fresh. This is an infallible rule to distinguish good and bad eggs.

TO DISPERSE BLACK ANTS.—A few leaves of green wormwood, scattered among the haunts of these troublesome insects, is said to be effectual in dislodging them.

HOW TO SWEEP A RAG CARPET.—In sweeping a rag carpet be careful to brush from width. I have often been complimented for the smoothness of my carpets, when in reality they were no smoother than many others. The secret lay in the manner of being swept.

TO WASH MERINO STOCKINGS.—The same method should be pursued as for flannels and all woolen and cotton goods. Boil the soap to make a lather, wash them in this warm, and rinse in a second lather. If white mix a little blue. Never rinse in plain water, or use cold water.

MAKING PAPER STICK TO WHITEWASHED WALLS.—A writer says: "Make a sizing of common glue and water, of the consistency of linseed oil, and apply with whitewash or other brush to the wall, taking care to go every part, and especially top and bottom. Apply the paper in the ordinary way."

TO PREVENT WOOD FROM CRACKING.—Put the articles in melting paraffine, heat them to a temperature of 212° Fahr., until bubbles of air cease to escape from the wood, then allow to cool to about 120° Fahr., then take from the bath and clean from the adhering paraffine by rubbing with a dry, coarse piece of cloth.

SOFTENING OLD PUTTY.—In removing old broken panes from a window, it is generally very difficult to get off the dry, hard putty, that sticks around the glass and its frame. To obviate this, dip a small brush in nitric or muriatic acid, and go over the putty with it. Let it rest a while, and it will soon become so soft that you can remove it with ease.

TAKING CARE OF BROOMS.—Have a screw with an eye or ring on its end; this can be screwed into the end of the handle of each successive new broom. It is handier to hang up by than a string, though the latter will do if always used. It is bad for a broom to leave it standing upon the brush. If not hung up, always with the stick end down.

A WARNING.—The strange death of a young lady at St. Mary's, recently ought to teach a lesson which young ladies need to learn. She had been sitting one evening in a close room reading by the light of a coal oil lamp which was without chimney. She inhaled the poisonous gasses produced by the burning lamp, and was found dead the next morning. We are afraid the practise of using lamps without chimneys is too common; but a commoner, and nearly as dangerous a practise is to leave a lamp burning all night with the wick partially turned down. people who indulge in this practise should remember that it produces poisonous gasses, and though the effect may not be fatal it is without doubt injurious to health.

PROFESSOR D. H. MAHON, of west Point, educator of most of the leading military officers of the United States of the present day, committed suicide on Saturday, by jumping from a steamboat. A proposal to superannuate him, he being 70 years of age, is said to have preyed on his mind, and is the only assignable cause for the act.

"CLARA, I love but thee alone!"—thus sighed the tender youth. "O, hear me, then, my passion own with trembling lips and earnest tone. Indeed, I speak the truth." He paused, the blush o'erspread her cheeks; she let him draw her near; scarce for emotion could she speak, yet did she ask in accents meek, "how much have you a week?"

One fair trial will convince the most skeptical.—Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25 cts, per box.

CHANDLER CRANE. M. D, Halifax, N. B.

Smoking—"Is'nt it Worse for a Man?"

It is two years since I left off the use of tobacco. I certainly did enjoy my cigar. I prided myself on my fine Havanas, and might have been seen almost any morning with one in my mouth, walking down to bussiness and puffing away in a most comfortable manner.

Why I left off was this: I had a little son about six years of age. He almost always hurried to be ready to walk down with me as far as his school. His bright face and extended hand were always welcome, and he bounded along beside me chatting as only such dear little fellows can. The city has in it many uncared for boys, whose chief delight seems to be to pick up pieces of discarded cigars and broken pipes, and with their hands in their pockets, to puff away in a very indignant manner. One morning it seemed as if little Edgar and I met a great many of those juvenile smokers. I became very much disgusted, and pointing them out to little Edgar as and warning of youthful delinquency, talked quite largely, and said the authorities ought to interfere and put a stop to such a public nuisance.

A little voice; soft and musical, came up to me as I gave an extra puff from my superb Havana. A bright little face was upturned and the words, "Isn't it worse for a man, father," came to my years. I looked down on the little fellow at my side, when his timid eye fell, and the color mounted on his boyish cheek, as if he feared he had said something bold and unfit. "Do you think it is worse for a man, Edgar?" I asked.

"Please, father, I think boys would not want to smoke if men did not do it."

Here was the answer. I threw away my cigar, and have never touched tobacco since in any form; and, having found that I am so much better without it, I never shall.

No Household God.

A little boy three years old, whose father was irreligious, spent several months in the dwelling of a godly family, where he was taught the simple elements of divine truth.

The good seed fell into good and tender soil, and the child learned to note the difference between a prayerless and a christian dwelling. One day, as some one was conversing with the little fellow about the great and good God, the child said:

On Tuesday evening Mr. Fowler invites he people of the Town to a railway meeting, and, of course, little harm is done by going, and much may be learned. A full meeting on railways is always certain, so that Mr. Fowler will have ample opportunity of letting the people of Peterboro know what he intends doing. He intends that the Belleville people shall catch the fire of his energy and do something. Now if he succeeds in bringing that about, if nothing more, he will have worked wonders.

In the meantime we are waiting an answer from the Cobourg Railway men, hence Peterboro is in the position of doing nothing for a few days—but by the time they are enabled to take a position there can be no doubt but that they will be in favor of railroad progress, but in what way we cannot now say with certainty.

Apent Water Works, we clip the following from the Port Hope Times:—

WATER WORKS.—The Peterboro' Examiner has the following paragraph:—"Port Hope is agitating the subject of Water Works Mr. Waterspoon Brantford, lately attended a public meeting there, and stated the public cost of such works for Port Hope would be $32,000. The meeting then agreed to recommend the Council to pay a yearly bonus for ten years of $1,600 a year, or about 5 per cent on the outlay—not half so liberal as our people who offer a bonus of 8 per cent. And yet the advantages of Peterboro in regard to obtaining a supply of water, are tenfold those of Port Hope."

Our Peterboro friends may find by and by that their extraordinary "liberality" is a little short sighted, and that the very way to insure careful and proper management is not to guarantee more than the legal rate of interest upon the capital invested. A company will scarcely be as careful when sure of eight per cent under any circumstances, as if they have to make their profits by proper and energetic management. Besides the Port Hope scheme is likely to be a good paying one with the bonus given.

We are in perfect accord with the Times on this subject, and our remarks were not with the intention of boasting of Peterborough liberality, but rather to praise Port Hope carefulness and economy, compered with Peterboro, without finding undue fault with home government. There is not a doubt but 8 per cent of a bonus yearly is altogether to large a sum to offer to any company. Money is now easily obtained at 7 per cent on good security, and ere another year, terms will be easier, as the present abundant harvest will enable farmers to place immence sums on deposit, or at interest. It is believed that about $15,000 to $20,000 will be the outlay necessary for Water Works here, as the privelage is unsurpassed in Canada for obtaining a water supply. The company, therefore, from the very first will be in receipt of at least 8 per cent on their capital, and, as the Times wisely intimates, our "liberality is a little short sighted" and will not insure careful and proper management. And assuredly the very way to secure careful management would be to let the company have some little risk, and then they would take more care.

It does appear as if some of our citizens have considerable overplus capital, and seek safe investment for it. The scheme too, to confine the taking of stock as much as possible to the people of the town, is a little unwise. Suppose some forty or fifty of the citizens of Peterboro should become stockholders in the company, and that at the end of a year some fresh manipulations are necessary, will there not then be forty or fifty persons to buttonhole every councillor on every corner, and thus day by day continue their work, until they succeed by their continual wearing of the peopeles representatives in Council. And, again, if one Councillor should prove too obdurate for the will of the Co., will there not be just the same forty or fifty stockholders to unite to secure the defeat of the intractable ones. And if ever the company be formed, as now contemplated, all these things will come to pass.

Five per cent on twenty five thousand dollars would be a large enough bonus for Water Works in Peterboro, and the people should bear in mind that every cent above that, is too much, and will tend to recklessness in the company's management. It will be urged that it all goes into the pockets of the people of Peterboro, but then the division is not general, it will go into the pockets of a few while all will have to pay. Some scheme of Water Works is wanted, but we must confess that we fear the result to the ratepayers of Peterboro, in regard to Water Works on the scheme now reported on especially as far as the bonus is concerned. The Port Hope people are wise in limiting the bonuses at first, for afterwards they will find it increase fast enough.

J. A. MCDONALD'S TESTIMONIAL.—At a late meeting of the Executive Committee of this Testimonial, held during the past week, it was reported that over $34,000 have been collected and placed on deposit into building societies at 6 per cent.

Pinsonnault who killed Paradis in a drunken row last week, near Laprarie, has had a verdict of wilful murder rendered against him by the Coroner's jury. He is in Montreal jail awaiting his trial. The two were drinking together before they quarrelled.

THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY,—From a letter in another column from Mr. John Fowler our readers will learn what is being done in the matter of the above railway. Mr. Fowler is a railway man, and just now has almost railroad on the brain—it requires such mon to drive things at railroad speed. It will also be seen that on the 20th instant Directors will be elected at Belleville, and immediately after Mr. Fowler promises "work."

Home and Health for October is a splendid number. The reading matter is well selected. The original matter is of a high tone, and the selections very choice indeed: and the whole of the highest moral tendency. It is $1.50 a year. Published by W. R. DePuy & Bro., 303 Broadway, New York. It can be ordered through Mr. Kidd or Mr. Menzies.

COBOURG AND PETERBORO RAILWAY:—We understand that at a meeting of Committee held on Friday evening last, a resolution was passed to request the Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railway and Mining Company to give an answer within ten days to the Peterboro Railway Committee, of the intentions of the Company in regard to proceeding to reopen the Cobourg Railroad to Peterboro and the extension to Mud Lake.

SMITH.—The friends of Temperance on the fourth line, Smith, had an anniversary tea on Friday evening last. The School House was well filled and an excellent tea was provided by the ladies' of that section of Smith, and freely partaken of by all who were present. The proceeds were to be applied to procuring a library for a Union Sabbath School, held in the school house.

Mr. W. Graham was unanimously chosen Chairman, and made a few suitable remarks on the work of the temperance people, and the success attending it—also referring to the duty of christians of all denominations to discountenance this vice and do all in their power to banish it from the land.

Rev. Mr. Dyall addressed the audience on the evil of intemperance, and the necessity of early determining to avoid the accursed bowl. At the close of the meeting the fragments were sold. An excellent choir sang several appropriate pieces which added much to the pleasures of the evening.

How Reasonable!

The Board of School Trustees have passed a resolution excluding from the public schools all pupils not residing in the town.

By this resolution the children of many parents who pay heavy taxes to the school, are excluded because their parents happen to reside outside the Town limits.

The Board at the same time agree to consider boarders as resident pupils. Yet the parents of these boarders may reside in another province—even in Europe, and may never have paid a cent of taxes in Peterboro or any where, and never may pay taxes for aught we know. Yet these pupils are to be favored as resident pupils, while others who pay from $20 to $50 a year of taxes in Peterboro cannot send a child at all: at least so say the members of the Board, right or wrong.

In a note, page 39, of the School Manual we find the following by the Chief Superintendent:—

"Boarders until after twelve months residence in a section are non-residents in the sense of the act, and cannot therefore claim admission to the school. They must make special arrangements with the Trustees, and their attendance must be returned as non-residents."

On the 13th page. "The resident or non-resident assessed freeholders and householders are voters at a school meeting." Why? if they have no right to send to send to school. On the 14th page again it is explicitly stated that the legal voters in a section are the assessed freeholders or householders—unless supporters of a separate school.

It is right that those outsiders who do not directly pay a school tax to support the schools, should have no right to send his children to the school; but a ratepayer who does all his business in the Town—pays a direct school tax also, ought to have a legal right to send his children to the school, and no doubt has the right if he but assert it, and obtain a legal decision in the matter.

Union School.

Mr. McKenzie, Inspector of High Schools, visited the Peterboro school on Friday and Monday. Thirty one were promoted from the Public to the High School department, after written examinations in the prescribed subject. A few were disappointed, but these were not numerous.

The inspector spoke in the most favorable terms of the state of the school, expressing a wish that he might not have many schools as ambitious as the Peterborough school, as it was no trifling matter to conduct an examination in so large a school. He spoke very favorably of Mr. Taylor's latin class. The change to a he considered certain, as the law in that respect was being fully complied with, there being four male teachers wholly engaged in high school work—even now. He expressed himself pleased with the management of the school, even to the elementary departments of the high school work.

The number on the roll in the High School department is now 185, and the average for the last month about 170. We feel certain that our school has now attained the largest average of any High school in Ontario, as the last report of the Chief Superintendent, it was one of those which stood highest, and about equal in attendance.

Mr. McKenzie, however, said that he believed Mr. Dixon would no longer be allowed to retain the position of Principal of the public school, as his whole time must be devoted to high school work. This is certainly undue interference with the internal management of school work, and is equivalent to breaking up the union school. To do so will be a serious step for the board, as no previous period in the history of the Peterborough school was there greater harmony among the Teachers nor co-operation in carrying on the work of the school. Mr. Dixon is highly respected by all, so much so that it will be difficult to fill his place. We do not see why he should not still retain his position over both schools, with advantage to both.

The Council met on monday evening. Present—The Mayor and Messrs. English, Lundy, Morrow, Toole, Stevenson, Edmison, Smith, Rutherford, Hopkins.

FIRE IN MINDEN.—The Independent says We regret to learn that Mr. Charles Austin of Minden, was burnt out on the night of Friday, the 22nd inst. There was no one at home at the time, the men folks being away trapping, and Mrs. Austin was nursing a sick neighbour at some little distance. The origin of the fire is unknown, and the house was destroyed with all its contents, as no one knew of the disaster untill next morning. The correspondent to whom we are indebted for the above particulars does not tell us the value of the property burnt, nor whether or not there was any insurance.

It is a remarkable and a most interesting fact that the very first use to which the discovery of printing was applied was production of the Bible. This was accomplished at Mentz, between the year 1440 and 1445, Gotenberg was the inventor of the art, and Faust, a goldsmith furnished the necessary funds. Of the first printed Bibles eighteen copies are known to be in existence.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Grand Junction R. R.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR:—

On Thursday last I was at Belleville at the meeting of the Provisional Directors, and that there was $160 000 private stock subscribed, and allotted.

On Friday I commenced the survey with Mr. Geo. Rennie, Engineer, and his staff, and as the work will be very light from Belleville to Campbellford, I advertised for 70,000 R. R. ties to be delivered by the 1st of January, 1872, and if I can get the iron for that length of road within the next two months I intend having the track laid to Campbellford before this year is out. I shall be at Peterboro on Tuesday next, to start a staff of Engineers from there and run the line East until they meet Mr. Rennie. I intend starting a gang of "Navvies" at Peterboro soon, as I do not want to lose any time in getting the whole line completed. I fully expect to have the road running to Peterboro early next summer. I have written to England for the iron, and expect it out by the first vessel in spring. It is my intention to break ground at Peterboro, and have a good gathering of the leading men of the Province, with a lunch, and a ball at night. Then commence work in earnest; and if the company will keep a load with the finances, get the bonuses up, and have the money ready when the work is done, I am determined to astonish the natives in putting the road through to Georgian Bay.

As soon as the Engineers get the line located I shall advertise for 2,000 men to work on the Grand Junction Railway.

I shall also put on another staff of Engineers to run the line from Peterboro to Fenelon Falls, and a fourth staff of Engineers on at Fenlon Falls to run the line from there to Muskoka River, on the Georgian Bay. A great many of my friends try to advise me not to go so fast, but wait until all the bonuses are got up. I never lost anything by going too fast with railway work, but I have sometimes by being too slow, and experience has taught me to have confidence. I am fairly on the track, and my motto is go ahead.

Yours truly,
JOHN FOWLER.

Peterboro, Oct. 2nd, 1871.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

DEAR SIR:—

Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to let the public know something of a Sabbath School pic-nic held in Stone's neighbourhood, in the township of Burleigh. The inhabitants of Burleigh are an intelligent and sociable people, who, (as many of you are aware) came from the front townships, all in locating themselves in this comparatively new place, they did not leave behind those social faculties implanted in them by their Creator, nor are they willing to leave those faculties uncultivated. In the north part of this township, for the last three years, they have had a very successful Sabbath School and a pic nic each year. The inhabitants of the south part of the township thought it near time when they would do something in that way, especially for the encouragement of those who were taking such an active part in sustaining the Sabbath School. The 20th of September, was appointed as the festive day, in a beautiful grove a little west of the school house. About 10 o'clock the people began to gather from all directions, until I was lead to wonder where so many cheerful and happy looking faces could come from, and still greater was my surprise to behold the well arranged table so abundantly spread with such abundant provisions. 2 o'clock arrived—the command being given to fall into feasting file the tables were soon surrounded. Thanks were offered by the Rev. Mr. Craig, and all set to work to dispose of part of what lay before them, asking no questions for conscience sake; after satisfying themselves with the good things provided they were prepared for something of a more intellectual kind.

Mr. D. Anderson having been called to the Chair, expressed his pleasure to behold such a grand result from their first efforts in the way of a pic-nic, and after a few more suitable remarks, he called on the choir who entertained the audience with one of their favorite pieces.

The Chairman then called on the Rev. Wm. Craig, W. M., who came forward and made some well-timed remarks in reference to the success that attended their efforts, and, especially in reference to the object of the pic-nic. The choir then favored us with another beautiful piece of music.

The chairman then announced that as Mr. Campbell, Presbyterian Missionary, who for some time past had labored here, was now about to leave to pursue his studies at Knox College, Toronto, his friends were about to present him with an address and a beautiful Bible.

The chairman in behalf of the people of Burleigh read the following address:

Mr. Campbell, we the inhabitants of Burleigh, have very highly appreciated your pleasant and sociable company during you sojurn with us, and still more highly have we appreciated your untiring zeal and earnest efforts to proclaim to us the blessed gospel of God's dear Son; and we hope your earnest efforts and warnings will never be forgotten while memory lasts. As you are now about to leave us we desire to express our sorrow to part with you, and we here present you with this sacred volume, hoping you will kindly accept it, not because of its intrinsic value, but as a token of our esteem and respect for you, hoping that it may be the man of your counsel and the guide of your life, and that when form and ceremonies assault your faith with treacherous art, that you may call them vanities and lies and bind this Gospel to your heart, is the sincere prayer and earnest desire of the donors.

Mr. Campbell not having known of the intention of his friends, had not time to prepare a written reply, but did so verbally in a very effecting manner, thanking them for their kindness—saying that he would treasure up the sacred volume as a memento of their good will, and hoped that all present would meet where parting would be no more and sorrow never come.

The choir then favored us with one of the national anthems, after which a vote of thanks were presented to the several parties which had officiated during the day; after which all joined in giving three hearty cheers for our noble Queen.

ONE PRESENT

The Presbyterian College Difficulty.

The committee for arranging matters for the union of the two Presbyterian Churches at present sitting in St. Paul's Church, has a most important task before it, and is discussing the question at issue before it with much dignity. The most difficult question is, what to do with the various colleges at present carried on by the two Churches. If nothing was done disasters would ensue. The corporation of Queen's College, Kingston, for instance, would lapse as soon as the Church which it is now connected went out of existence. The simple proposition of the Hon. Mr. Morris is, to receive in the meanwhile all such institutions into precisely the same relation to the new Church which they have heretofore sustained to existing Churches. One objection to the to exist principally among Canada Presbyterians, to the Church having anything to do with secular education. On this question that Church has never expressed itself, although it has, however, expressed itself very strongly on a question practically related to it; namely, that it will have nothing to do, as a religious body, with receiving government grants of any kind. Another objection is found in the fact that the adoption of five institutions in Manitoba, Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and Halifax would be introducing a complexation which, however undesirable, it would be very much more difficult to alter at any future time than at the present juncture. Rev. Dr. Jinkins urges with great earnestness on the Committee the importance of contemplating one great institution only; and Dr. McVicar, notwithstanding acknowledged objections, adds many cogent reason for this course. By such economy and concentration of the resources and talent of the Church it might be hoped that an institution would come into existence which would so command the respect of the denomination, that a minister would not be considered as necessarily inferior because educated in Canada. Witness.

The way they make money at Washington. Have we any such rings in Canada?

Three years ago a person named Kidwell, residing in Washington, discovered some valuable stone quaries on land owned by him near that city. He proceeded at once to organize a company, known as the "Seneca Building Stone Association," with a view to have the stone used in the various public buildings and works at Washington. Having been an avowed secessionist during the war he could not bring political influence to bear on the Government, and therefore shrewely changed his tack. Instead of begging for contracts, he increased the stock of his company from $200,000 to $500,000, and judiciously distributed the same among the different members of the Government, from President Grant downwards. Behold the result: the Seneca stone is now used in all sorts of ways, and in all directions on public works and buildings. Among the stockholders there are:—U. S. Grant, President of the United States, $25,000; Horace Porter, private secretary to President, $10,000; General F. T. Dent, assistant private secretary to President, $10,000; Gen. O. E. Babcock, present Superintendent of Public Buildings, $10,000; H. D. Cooke, Governor District of Columbia, 240,000; J. L. Kikwell, $130,000; Paymaster-General Brice, $14,000; Surgeon-General Barnes, $11,000; Quartermaster-General Meigs, $9,000, and a number of less prominent Government officials. So that Kidwell, Grant & Co. are becoming rich at the public expense.

In his wanderings through Iowa, Horace Greely has stumbled on rather a curious place named Grinnel; it is a village of from 2,500 to 3,000 inhabitants, and "no glass of liquor is or ever was sold there"; it has no "bar room," no "saloon"; not even a "large beer" saloon. Every deed given for land covenants that the purchaser shall not sell and shall not permitt to be sold any intoxicating beverages on the premises As a consequence, Mr. Greeley tells us that Grinnel has no loafers, no ruffin, no toopers, and no brawlers. It strikes us that Grinnel has no "large saloon" just outside the corporation limits would be a tempting investment for an enterprising Yankee.

Speaking of the threatning raid on Fort Garry, the New York Herald says:—"We advise our Fenian brethern not to do it. They might be successful, but the capture of the whole territory, with the Hudson Bay Company's property and all the half-breeds in in the country, would not help them and jot towards securing the liberty of Ireland.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that at the Sunday question has reached the Odd Fellows. A regulation of the Order restricts Sundays meetings to funerals. This the German members numbering 40,000 or more, do not like and an attempt will be made at the meeting of the Grand Lodge at Chicago to remove the prohibition against Sundays gatherings.

During the past three years the number of post offices in the United States, the postmaster of which are appointed by the President, has been increased about 350; the total number now being nearly 1,200. These offices became Presidential under the law where the postmaster' salary exceeds $2,000 and a large increase is indicative of a rapidaly growing correspondence.

A lady writer blames the moon more than the women for ridiculous fashions now in vogue. She says: "If all men possessing $100,000 and upwards should form a league not to marry any woman who mounted a chignon, how long do you suppose the ugly monstrosity would continue to be in vogue?"

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, and yet you every body hates to take it. Being a disease of itself, and a most offensive one, as the mild but efficient sugar-coated Pills. The obvious reason of this is, that most cathartics in market contain calomel, which, although a valuable remedy when properly combined, it is always repulsive and for many others equally valuable, but which many object to, because they have been salivated, and the remedy proves worse than the disease. Ayer's Cathartic Pills are entirely free from calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring, when irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the box, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, or Biliousness, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Kidneys, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppressions a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in their estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that he must obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, as no one can be aware the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Aguo Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not 1. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, or, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in nowise injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe about a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Thoroughly disorganized persons, either residing in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver into healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

IRON IN THE BLOOD

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

The large and increasing sales of these Perfected Glasses is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: the ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality.

With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing Spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.

Singing in the Rain.

The day dawned barren and chilly.
An east wind railed at the pane;
Gray fox veiled the leafing chestnut,
While a robin sang in the rain:

Sang in the rain his sweetest—
"Cheer-up, cheer-up, cheer;"
The eye could not catch the warbler,
But his voice rang silvery clear.

Blasts shook the tree by the shoulder,
The tree cried out with pain;
But somewhere, high in the leafage,
A robin sang in the rain.

He might have sung to the angels,
But I think he sang to us here;
The sinless need not the counsel—
"Cheer-up, O cheer-up, cheer."

To the music pages above him
He looked as the blind may look;
No star-notes guided the singer,
Cloud fingers had shut the book.

Yet well he had learned the carol,
And he sang it out of his heart;
Nor once was it worth his asking
When the veil would fall apart.

"Cheer-up, cheer-up, O cheer-up,"
Still the sad leaves among;
His beautiful breast was bubbling
A fountain of raptured song.

It never can flow so welcome
Under a sky all blue;
What is the lesson he teaches?
I learned it, and so may you.

Choice Literature.

The Beggar and the Banker.

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?

"Stand out of the way," said a rough, surly voice under my window one day, as I sat musing over the bustling scenes below me, at my lodgings in Chestnut street.

"Your honor will please recollect, replied a sharp and somewhat indignant voice—"your honor will please to recollect that I'm a beggar, and have as much right to the road as yourself."

"And I'm a banker," was retorted still more gruffly and angrily."

Amused at this strange dialogue, I leaned over the case, and beheld a couple of citizens in the position which the pugilist would probably denominate squared, their countenances somewhat menacing, and their persons presenting a contrast both ludicrous and instructive. The one was a purse-proud lordly mannered man—appareled in silk, and protecting a carcase of nearly the circumference of a hogshead; and the other a ragged and dirty, but equally an impudent and self important personage; and from a comparison of their countenances, it would have puzzled the most profound M. D. to determine which of their rotundities was best stored habitually with good victuals and drink.

Upon a close observation, however, of the countenance of the banker, I discovered almost as soon as my eye fell upon it, a line bespeaking humor and awakened curiosity, as best calculated to excite and eyeing his antagonist; and this became more clear and conspicuous when he lowered his tone and asked. "How will you make that right appear?"

"How?" said the beggar; "why, listen a moment, and I'll teach you; in the first place, you take notice that God has given me a soul and body just as good for all the purposes of thinking, eating, drinking and taking my pleasure as he has you—and then you may remember Dives and Lazarus just as we pass. Then, again, it's a free country, and here, too, we are on an equality—for you must know, that here, even a beggar's dog may look a gentleman in the face with as much indifference as he would a brother. I and you have the same common Master, are equally free; live equally easy; and are both travelling the same journey bound to the same place, and both have to die and be buried at the end."

"But," interrupted the banker, "do you pretend there is then no difference between a beggar and a banker?"

"Not in the least," returned the other with the utmost readiness, "not in the least as to essentials. You swagger and drink wine in company of your own choosing I swagger and drink beer, which I like better than your wine, in company that I like better than your company. You make thousands a day perhaps; I make a shilling a day perhaps, if you are contented I am; we are equally happy at night. You dress in new clothes; I am just as comfortable in old ones, and have no trouble in keeping them from soiling; if I have less property than you, I have less to care about; if fewer friends I have less friendship to lose; and if I do not make as great a figure in the world, I make as great a shadow on the pavement; I am as great as you. Besides, my word for it, I have fewer enemies; meet with fewer losses, carry as light a heart, and sing as many songs as the rest of you.

"And then," said the banker, who had all along tried to get a word in edgeways, "in the contempt of the world nothing?"

"The envy of the world is as bad as its contempt; you have perhaps, the one, and I a sharp of the other. We are matched, there, too. And besides, the world deals in this matter equally unjust with us both. You and I live by our wits, instead of leaving by our industry; and the only difference in this particular worth naming is, that it costs society more to maintain you than it does me—I am content with a little, you want a great deal. Neither of us raise grain or potatoes, or weave cloth, or manufacture anything useful; we therefore add nothing to the common stock; we are only consumers; and if the world judge with strict impartiality, therefore, it seems to me I would be pronounced the cleverest fellow.

Some passers-by here interrupted the conversation. The disputants separated, apparently good friends; and I drew in my head, ejaculating somewhat in the play—is there then no difference between a beggar and a banker?

But several years have since passed away; and now both these individuals have paid the last debt of nature. They died as they had lived, the one a beggar and the other a banker. I examined both their graves when I next visited the city. They were of similar length and breadth; the grass grew equally green above each; the sun looked down as pleasantly on the one as on the other. No honors, pleasures, or delights clustered round the grave of the rich man. No finger of scorn was pointed to the graveof the poor man. They were both equally deserted, lonely and forgotten! I thought, too, of the destinies to which they have passed; and of that stage in which temporal honors are regarded not; where pride and all the circumstances which surround this life never find admittance. Then the distinction of time appeared indeed as an atom in the sunbeam compared with those which are made in that changeless state to which they both passed.—Exchange.

Is it Food or Physic?

Dr. Henry Munros, of England, has recently published a valuable tract entitled is Alcohol a necessary of life, from which we select the following facts:—

Scientific facts strongly tend to show that both the mental, vital and physical powers of men and health are, on the whole, depressed and maimed by the use of alcohol; and that we must not flatter ourselves that we are taking food and nourishment when we are only swallowing a poison. Distinguished physiologists have, in spite of themselves, been driven to the conclusion that alcohol is unnecessary and injurious to the healthy body. Dr. Lankester frankly admits that it charmes the palate, that its disuse is an exercise of virtue of self-control. Some of our leading physicians, aware of the injury its presence in the system occasions, own that they take it because it's nice; and others, although they are cognizant of its tendancy to shorten life, say that they would rather live a few years less than forego the pleasurable things it awakens. In fact, they fall back upon the old story—that persons take alcohol "because they like it."

"I have had, for the last seven years, much experience in the medical attendance upon persons who are tot l abstainers. During that period hundreds of that class of people have been under my care I find that, as a class they do not suffer from anything like the drinkers of the intoxicating drinks; that when they are sick, the sickness is much more amenable to treatment, and, necessarily, they are sooner well again. Moreover, I am convinced that, in many cases, the patient's recovery was entirely owing to a life of previous abstinence from intoxicating beverages. On comparing the results of sickness and death occuring in two large friendly societies under my care, the one composed of total abstainers and the other of non abstainers. I have arrived at the conclusion that the total abstainers have much better health, are liable to a much less amount of sickness, and have fewer deaths than the moderate drinkers. In the non-abstaining society I find that the average amount of sickness experienced last year was eleven days twenty-two hours per member, and that the number of deaths was only two in five years, or less than one quarter per cent per annum. I ought, perhaps, in justice to myself, to add that, in the treatment of the various diseases in both societies, no alcoholic liquor was administered. It is now seven years since I have ordered any alcoholic drink, either as a medicine or diet; and the success attendant upon its disuse, in cases where in former years I should have ordered it largely, and condemned myself if I had not done so, is so gratifying as to lead me to its entire abandonment in the treatment of disease. In typhoid fever, as well as in other cases of fever of the worst character, in cholera, in sudden and violent hemorrhages, in delirium tremens, in rheumatism, in gout, and in many other diseases, the succession of this treatment, without the use of alcohol, has been most marked and satisfactory. Our profession is now beginning to doubt the vaunted efficacy of alcohol as a therapetic agent. Its reputation for the cure of disease is becoming exceedingly problematical. I have no doubt that in a few years alcohol will no longer be administered as an internal medicine, but will take its proper place as an external remedy.

Explanation of Blushing.

An emotion—sometimes pleasurable, sometimes painful takes possession of the mind, and thereupon a hot flush is felt, the skin grows hot, and according to the intensity of the emotion these changes are confined to the cheek only, or extend to the "roots of the hair," or "all over."

What is the cause of these changes? The blood is a red and hot fluid; the skin reddens and grows hot because its vessels suddenly contain an increased quantity of this red and hot fluid; and its vessels contain more because the small arteri s suddenly dilate, the natural moderate contraction of their muscles being superseded by a state of relaxation. On the other hand, in many people extreme terror causes the skin to grow cold, and the face to appear pale and pinched.—Under these circumstances the supply of blood to the skin is greatly diminished in consequence of an excessive stimulation of the nerves of the small arteries, which causes them to contract, and so cut off the supply of blood.

A Distressing Cough causes the friends of the sufferer almost as much pain as the sufferer himself, and should receive immediate attention. Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry speedily cure coughs, colds, influenza, sore throat, &c. It will always relieve consumption, and in many well attested cases it has effected a perfect cure.

One of Sandfield's Appointments.

The Stratford Beacon says:—Mr. S. Robb, of Downie, has received the appointment of Registrar for the North Riding of Perth, and on Wednesday he took the formal steps required By law preliminary to entering upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Rather, the statement should go no further than that he gave necessary bonds; for he cannot have the remotest intention of discharging the duties of the office, seeing that for so doing he is utterly disqualified.—We have no desire to speak in the slightest degree with disparaging injustice of Mr. Robb, whose name, to our knowledge, never before appeared in these columns, and would not grace them now were it not that he has been cruelly dragged forth to occupy a position for which he is so notoriously unfitted that his nomination to the office by his brother-in-law, Mr. Mowat-ith, has made him the laughing-stock of the whole community. Had he remained in the obscurity that has been his lot for the last sixty or seventy years, we should have had nothing to do with him, or with aught concerning him. But when he was taken out of the South Riding to fill one of the most important offices in the North Riding, in preference to scores of highly deserving, influential, and competent men residing in the North it behooves us to enquire what manner of man he is—with special reference, of course, to the qualifications essentially for a person in that position. Without saying anything about Mr. Robb's outward appearance and social standing, which are quite in keeping with his mental attainments, it is enough to state that the latter are about as low as is compatible with the ability to write his name to a business letter, penned for him by some one else; these attainments not being sufficiently high to enable him to write such a letter himself. In a word he is exceedingly ignorant. Here is the challlence of the Beacon

"In proof that we have not given an unfaithful discription of the qualifications, or entire want of qualifications, of Mr. Robb for the office, we propose a simple test, to which no office-holder could possibly object. It is not under Mr. Spence's Act, to summon him before a board of examiners and require him to begin the studies of a boy in the lowest form of the high school, or even to entitle him to admission to, say, the fourth department of the public school. The test we propose is merely for the Attorney-General to send up his Inspector of Registry offices and require Mr. Robb in his presence to make a faithful and correct entry in the books of the simplest document required to be recorded. Less than this could not be asked. But will the r latives of Mr. Robb accept the challence, and submit him to the test?"

How to Prepare Butterfly Collections.

The first thing to be procured is the butterfly-net, which is a bag made out of two pieces of muquito-netting—blue is the best—about two feet deep, tapering towards the bottom, and fastened to a piece stout wire bent into a circle of about a foot in diameter, the two ends of which are fastened into a light but strong stick three or four feet in length.

The next requisite is something to kill them with. Chloroform is best, but in default of that other will do. It should be applied to the head of the butterfly with a small camel's hair brush.

Then come the pins. They should be long and slender; real butterfly pins are best but very fine common ones will do Then you must have a pasteboard box to put the butterflies in when you catch them to bring them home.

The cases are the last thing to be thought of. The frame of the case should be very much like a picture frame, deep enough for the pins to go in, with the back, on which the butterflies are fastened, so arranged as to come out, being in place by little cleats, and a plate of glass fixed securely on the front. It should be made of soft wood, so that the pins can stick in easily. The size of the case depends upon the taste on the collector.

"Streching" a butterfly is the process of keeping its wings in natural position when at rest. You have a board with grooves in it wide enough to admit the body of the butterfly or moth, with little pieces of cork fastened on it to stick the pins into. Then take some narrow strips of soft paper, press the wings of the butterfly down with them as nearly in the natural p sit on as possible and fastened them with pins. In a few days the b tterfly will be dry enough so you can take the papers off and put it in the case. Our Young Folks.

OUR MOTHERS.—Many a discouraged mother folds her tired hands at night, and feels as if she had after all done nothing, although she has not spent an idle moment since she rose. It is nothing that your little helpless children have had some one to come to with all their childish griefs and joys. It is nothing that your husband feels safe when he is away to his business, because your careful hand directs everything at home, It is nothing that when his business is over, that he has the blessed refuge at home, which you have that day done your best to brighten and refine. Oh, weary and faithful mother, you little know your power when you say, 'I have done nothing.' There is a book in which a fairer record than this is over against your name.

ANIMAL FOOD.—Many of the ancients never ate animal food. Plutarch, a learned Grecian, abstained from it altogether. He lived to be nearly eighty years old and was a hard worker. He is said to have written three hundred philosophical works. One hundred and twenty-five of them are extent. This celebrated man once wrote: "You ask me for what reason Phythagoras obtained from eating the flesh bentes; for my part I am astonished to think what appetite first induced man to taste of dead carcass; or what motive could suggest the notion of nourishing himself with the flesh of dead animals." People would live much cheaper if they where to adopt Plutarch's views.

Two or three doses of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders will cure a horse of any common cough or cold, and the very worst case may be cured in a few weeks We know this from experience

Drilling in Winter Wheat.

As much as the seed is liable to be pressed, by the feet of teams, too deep, when the grain is sown broad cast, and much also to be scarcely barsed, putting in winter wheat with a grain drill is the only true mode of distributing the seed. It is eminently important that every kernel be buried at a uniform depth, which cannot be done when the seed is scattered broadcast and harrowed in. There is such a thing as planting seed wheat too deep; and every experienced wheat-grower knows that when a portion of the seed is barely covered, a part planted two inches deep, as the grain will be buried when it is harrowed in, the young plants will not grow uniformly, they will not endure the changes of winter with so little injury, and the yield, of grain at harvest time will not be so large, as the seed had been drilled in. Besides this, it will usually require half a bushel more of seed per acre when sowed broadcast than when it is put in with a drill. This single consideration is sufficient of itself to induce tillers of the soil to plant their winter grain with a drill.

A great many intelligent farmers do not understand how they may take advantage of the habits of the young wheat plant in fortifying them against injury by being lifted out by the frosts of winter. Yet such a thing can be done, often has been performed, and is a common practice with many of our most successful producers of fine wheat. If a kernel of wheat be planted five or six inches deep, a system of seminal or primary roots will be sent out from it in a horizontal direction; and a system of secondary roots will appear at the surface. But if the seed is put in toward the latter part of the growing season, no secondary roots will be formed. Hence as soon as 3 or 4 inches in depth of the surface is frozen, the stem will be held in the frozen soil, will be lifted from the roots, and will often be entirely separated midway between the roots and the surface of the ground. But by puting in the seed as a uniform depth of about one and a half inches, the primary roots will underlock and the secondary roots will appear so near the primaries that the plants will fall and rise and fall bodily as the surface of the soil expands upwards as it freeses, and settles back after it has thawed By planting the grain one and a half inches deep, both systems of roots will be so near each other that they will hold the plants in the desired place much longer than the two system of two roots were four inches apart.

The most satisfactory period for sowing winter wheat in order to prevent injury from insect enemies and other drawbacks occurs from the 5th to the 20th of september, according to the locality and conditions of the soil. The later the seed can be put in, and yet allowed suitable time for the young plants to develop and cover the ground, the better it will be for the crop. If the ground is so rich that the wheat plants will be able to attain a strong growth before the end of the growing season if the seed is put in in October, that period will be found more desireable seed-time than any part of September.—Observer.

The following good story has been going the rounds of our English exchanges. It shows the necessity of soldiers being constantly on the alert and on no occasion leaving a chance for surprise; it also points out what might be effected in natural warfare by sleepless vigilance and energy. To add impuidence to the joke it is said that the Hertford Volunteer adjutant used their victims with Solicitor-General's stereotyped phrase so often used in the Tichborne case "would you be surprised to learn that you are captured."—Captain Cass, of the 9th Herts (Ware) Corps determined some days ago to give the men under his charge an opportunity of gaining an insight into camp duties by holding an encampment for one night on the grounds surrounding his residence at Presdales. Accordingly, in the evening, the Ware Volunteers pitched their tents at the appointed spot, and after enjoying a good supper at the expence of their captain, sentries were posted, and everything being made perfectly secure, those men not on duty turned in to rest, while the officers including Adjutant Gifford, retired to Captain Cass' house. The Hertford Volunteers, having heard of the encampment, determined if possible to "steal a march" on their Ware brethern in arms. For this purpose they mustered between 10 and 11 o'clock and, having been supplied with ten rounds of blank cartridge; they proceeded on their expedition about 60 strong—under the command of Captain Commandant Hawkes. Creeping through the grass and corn, soaking wet with dew, and screened by every available bit of cover, the attacking force divided into four detachments approached the camp in different directions, and succeeded in circling the centries and getting within a few yards of the camp before their presence was discovered. A signal was then give to call out the guard, and the whole of the Ware Volunteers alarmed by the fire of their enemies, soon on the alert and turned out in body, but only to be completely surrounded and captured en masse; for, not having supplied with ammunition, they were unable to resist. The captors gave the coup de grace to their expedition by a charge and a cheer. By this time the officers of the Ware corps, alarmed by the firing, came on to the ground in hot haste to see what it all meant when they too were quickly captured and their swords demanded. The surprise and chagrin of the Ware officers and men may be better imagined than described.—However, all heartily enjoyed the joke; and after mutual congratulations, the Hertford volunteers returned home, much pleased with the success of their bloodless victory, and leaving their Ware brethren to keep a sharper lookout for the rest of the night.

LANGUAGE OF MUSIC.—Music is the most beautiful language in the world, and the mind that thinks in melody must be a blissful, happy state; but to have the mind constantly calm and serene, the body must be free of ailment and pain, and we know of nothing so well adapted to prevent sickness, or for the cure of coughs, colds, rheumatism, neuralgia, summer complaints, &c, as the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." Condensed History of Steam.

About two hundred and eighty years ago B. C. Hies, of Alexandra, showed a toy which exhibited some of the powers of steam and was moved by its power.

A. D. 450. Anthemius, an architect, fixed several cauldrons of water, each covered with a wide bottom of the leather tube, which rose to a narrow top with pipes extending to the rafters of the burning building. A fire was kindled beneath the cauldrons, and the house was shaken by the effects of the steam ascending the tubes.—This is the first notice of the power of steam recorded.

In 1534, June 17, Blasco De Garay tried a steamboat of 200 tons with tolerable success at Barcelona, Spain. It consisted of a cauldron of boiling water under a moveable wheel on each side of the ship. It was laid aside as impracticable. A present however was made to Garay.

In 1690 the first railroad was constructed at Newcastle-on-Tyne

The first idea of a steam engine is the Marquis of Winchester's "History of inventions," A. D., 1663.

In 1710, Newcomer made the first steam engine in England.

In 1718, patents were granted to Severy for the first application of the steam engine.

In 1794, Thomas Watt made the first perfect engine that was made in England.

In 1776, Jonathan Hulliset for the idea of steam navigation.

In 1778, Thomas Paine at first proposed this application in America.

In 1785, two Americans published works about it.

In 1789, William Symington made a voyage on the Forth of Clyde Canal.

In 1802, this experiment was repeated.

In 1782, Ramsay propeled a boat by steam to New York.

In 1783 John Fitch, of Philadelpia, navigated a boat by a steam engine on the Delaware.

In 1793, Robert Fulton first began to apply his attention to steam.

In 1782, Oliver Evans, a native of Philadelphia, constructed a locomotive steam engine to travel on a turnpipe road.

Boys Learn Trade.

Farming is a trade, and a well educated boy will find on the farm an ample field for the exercise of all his faculties. He will study the experience of intelligent farmers, which he will see spread in the agricultural journals, and he will find in them his duties on the farm. Farming ought not, must not, in this advanced age, be held to be a humdrum business, requiring no mind, no reflection, no aiming for higher life. The well educated mind must direct the labours of the land, and then the sons of the farm will take positions that God and nature intends for them. The movements of colleges to educate the former—to give hive him just the education he needs—is a feature of times. It holes good to the man of the tanned brow and hard hand.

A recent event in our city has strongly impressed us with the profound judgement and energy of parents in giving their sons mechanical trades. Not require I to make the struggle of life alone, with their trades they go fourth into the world with a feeling of independence that assures success.—When sons of other parents, too proud to secure their love trades—who prefer to see them cutting tape, or weighing out butter—are in time without employment—too frequently loafing in saloons and kindred places. How will they lament the infatuation of their misjudging parents! While those young men who left home, took up the saw, and the plain, and the sledge; secure to themselves valuable trades, will raise up in their heart of hearts, think of their parents and call them blessed!

Boys! the days of youth are intended to fit you for your manhood—to fit you to take the places of those men who passing before you on whose shoulders rests the great superstructure of civilzed and christianized society.—Pacific Advocate

A REFRESHING BEVERAGE.—Dr. Walter Lewis, in describing the precaution against cholera adopted at the General Post-office, in London, Eng., says; "The men employed in sorting letters and newspapers suffered much from thirst, especially in hot weather, and consequently drank much water while engaged in their duties. Although the Post-office is supplied with excellent water, much diarrhœa was, nevertheless the result of this practice. To remedy this the officers, clerks and men of all classes have of late been supplied from the medicinal department with an agreeable drink, which not only assuages the thirst, but has moreover, strong antiseptic and anti-diarrhœa properties. It is called orangeade, and is thus composed: Take of dilute sulphuric acid concentrated infusion of orange peel, each twelve drachms; syrup of orange peel, five fluid ounces. This quantity is added to two imperial gallons of water. A large wineglassful is taken for a draught, mixed with more or less water according to taste. The officers drink this with pleasure. It is being consumed in large quantities daily and I am convinced it will be the means of warding of a great deal of sickness.

DELIRIUM TREMENS.—A Western physician successfully used ipecacuan in delirium tremens. He first gave it as an emetic, and afterwards from 15 to 18 grains every other hour. Connected with this remedy he used shower baths, and let the patients frequently drink strong beef tea, without any alcoholic stimulants. It quieted the nervous system, excited the appetite, acted on secretion, and uniformly produced sleep, during the patents in nearly every case.

There is no disease flesh is heir to more troublesome to manage than rheumatism.—It comes when you least expect it, and generally remains till it gets ready to go away. The most conspicuous remedy for the complaint is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Owners of Horses Rejoicing.

And why not? and who knows but their horses rejoicing as well: who can prove the contrary? But their owners because of the astonishing and almost miraculous effects on their horses of "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy." Some were lean and poor having no appetite, others would devour their food ravenously, yet derive no benefit from it; some were hide-bound, with rough and shaggy hair; others had severe coughs and cold, and other complaints particular to horses; on all it operates like a charm, the disease or complaint was speedily removed, the appetite and digestive organs corrected, the skin softened, and a slick shining appearance given to the coat all without any danger, or preventing the horse being used.—Remember the name and see that the signature of Hart & Co. is on each package.—Northrop & Lyman Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for canada. Whipping Horses.

There are persons who think that the spirit and temper of a horse must be broken to make him valuable. Prof. WAGENER, in his work on the "Education of Horses," says:—"I would caution those who train or use horses against exciting the ill will of the animal. Many think they are doing finely, and are proud of their success in horse training, by means of severe whipping, or otherwise rousing and stimulating the passion, and then, from necessity, crushing the will, through which the resistance is prompted. No mistake can be greater than this; and there is nothing that so fully exhibits the ability, judgement and skill of the real horseman as the care and tact displayed in winning instead of repelling the action of the mind. Although it may be necessary to use the whip sometimes, it should always be applied judiciously, and great care should be taken not to rouse the passion or excite the will to obstinacy.

"The legitimate and proper use of the whip is calculated to operate upon the sense of fear almost entirely. The affections and better nature must be appealed to in training a horse as well as in training a child. A reproof given may be intended for the good of the child, but, if only the passions are excited, the effect is depraving and injurious. This is a vital principle, and can be regarded in the management of sensitive, courageous horses only at the imminent risk of spoiling them. I have known many horses of naturally gentle character to be spoiled by being whipped once, and one horse that was made vicious by being struck with a whip once while standing in his stall.

"I have referred to these instances to show the danger of rough treatment, and the effect that may easily be produced by ill usage, especially with fine blood horses and those of a highly nervous temperament. Many other cases might be cited as such are by no means uncommon. Sensitive horses should never be left after they have been excited by the whip or other means, until calmed down by rubbing or patting the head and neck and giving apples, sugar, or something of which the animal is fond. Remember, the whip must be used with great care, or it is liable to do mischief, and may cause irreparable injury."

Maxims for Farmers.

1 Only good farming pays. He who sows or plants without reasonable assurance of good crops, annually, might better earn wages of some capable neighbor than work for so poor a paymaster as he is certain to prove himself.

2. The good farmer is proved such by the steady appreciation of his crops. Any one may reap an ample harvest from fertile virgin soil; the good farmer alone grows good crops at first, and better and better ever afterwards.

3. It is far easier to maintain the productive capacity of a farm than to restore it. To exaust its fecundity, and then attempt its restoration by buying costly commercial fertillizers, is wasteful and irrational.

4 The good farmer raises such products as are least exhaustive. Necessity may constrain him, for the first year or two, to sell grain, or even hay; but he will send of his surphus; mainly in the form of cotton, wool, meat, or butter and cheese, or something else that returns to to the soil nearly all that is taken from it. A bank account daily drawn upon, while nothing is deposited to its credit, must soon respond "No funds." So with a farm similiarly treated.

5. Rotation is at least negative fertilization. It may not positively enrich a farm; it will at least retard and postpone its impoverishment. How who grows wheat after wheat, corn after corn, for twenty years, will need to emigrate before that term is fulfilled. The same farm cannot support (or endure) him longer than that. All our wheat-growing sections of fifty years ago are wheat-growing no longer; while England grows larger crops thereof on the very fields that fed the armies of Saxon Herald and William the conqueror. Rotation has preserved these, as the lack of it has ruined those.

6. The best investment a farmer can make for his children is that which surrounds their youth with the rational delights of a beautious, attractive home. The dwelling may be small and rude, yet a flower will embellish, a choice fruit trees will enrich and gladden it; while grass and shade are within the reach of the humblest.

If only any tal or done on a farm is so profitable as that which makes the wife and children fond and proud of their home.

7. Wisdom is never dear, provided the article be genuine. I have known farmers who had toiled constantly from day-break to dark yet died poor, because, through ignorance, they wrought to disadvantage. If every farmer would devote two hours of each day to reading and reflection, there would be fewer failures in farming than at present.

8. A good practical education, including a good trade, is a better outfit for a youth than a grand estate with the draw back of an empty mind. Many parents have saved and pinched to leave their children rich, when half the sum lavished would have profited them far more had it been devoted to the cultivation of their minds, the enlargement of their capacity to think, observe, and work. The one structure that no neighborhood can afford to without is the school house.

9. A small library of well selected books in his house has saved many a youth from wandering into the baneful ways of the prodigal son. Where paternal strictness and severity would breed nothing but dislike, indifference, and a fixed resolve to abscond at the first opportunity, good and pleasant surroundings have weaned many a youth from the first wild impulse to go to sea or cross the continent, and make him a docile contented, obedient, happy lingerer by the parental fireside. In a family, however rich or poor, no other good is so cheap or no precious as thoughtful, watchful love.

10 Most men are born poor, but no man, who has average capacities and tolerable luck may remain so. And the farm

The Board of Examiners for the County of Bruce have given notice, that all certificates granted by the old County Boards, will expire in January, 1873, in fifteen months. The County Council should remove such men before the fifteen months expire. They are not fit for the honorable position to which they have been appointed. Many teachers holding County Board certificates are superor teachers.

In regard to one of John Sandfield's appointments, as Registrar for North Perth, an ont and out Combination Journal, the Mitchel Advocate, says:—"In short he is ignorant, scarcely able to sign his own name;" and again: "Shame on our member, to disgrace the party who placed him in power and make a fool of the poor old man. To place in the Registry Office an illitrate, uncouth brother-in-law is enough to sicken a horse." So write conservative journals of John Sandfields doings.

LECTURE:—We are pleased to learn that Professor Wild, of Albert University, has consented to deliver one of his able and popular lectures in Peterboro—about the end of October, of which due notice will be given. This is the first appearance of the Rev'd. lecturer in Peterboro, and the citizens would do well to make preparations to avail themselves of the ablest lecturer, we understand, in the Dominion. The subject has not yet been announced, but will be in a few days; also the day and place of the lecture. Next week we propose giving some selections of the opinion of the press, where Dr. Wild has spoken.

The following Telegram has been forwarded us, with a request to publish it. It is from the President of the Midland Railway Company, and we trust that the urgent demands of the starving and homeless people and children of the late flourishing Chicago, will not be neglected by the people of Canada. Cannot Peterboro do a little in this trying emergency.

Port Hope, October 11th, 1871.

"Please apprise the public, that this company will carry food and clothing, intended for the Chicago sufferrs, free of charge over this line of railway."

Charles Perry, Esq., informs us in a notice that will be found in to-day's issue, that he will be a candidate at the approaching election for west Peterborough. It is cruel of some of the Conservatives ranks to insinuate that this is only putting pressure on the Premier tighter, so as to induce him to appoint the present member for the Commons, ere the election comes on. Hungry office seekers may be anxious to get Mr. Perry out of the way, and, in consequence, they will insinuate cruel things about him. We know of a surety that they are far from hopeful in regard to the election of any one of their party. We would advise the Reform party to take a lesson from Mr. Perry's tactics, and have their candidate ready. In the meantime we advise the electors not to be in a hurry promising to any one, until the candidates are fairly before them. As to unfounded rumours pay no attention to them.

The Railway meeting on Tuesday evening was a great success; those present appeared in favor of more railway communication. The Belleville people, however, must wake up if they are to get the Grand Junction. The idea of Belleville giving the petty sum of $100,000 to secure a road of 140 miles, through the finest section of country in Canada., and to the Georgian Bay, is simply nonsense. Belleville must come down with $300,000, and then the promoters of the scheme will have confidence, and not till then. Mr. Fowler is an indefatigable railway man, and one who would build the road in less time than most other men, but he cannot build it for nothing; and Belleville which is to receive such immense advantages from it should at once show that she realizes her position and responsibilities and aid him handsomely; confidence will then take the place of uncertainty. At present, very few believe that Belleville is sincere, as the idea of getting 140 miles of railway for $100,000, is childish.

PROF ASHLEY, the great London Ventriloquist, and Illusionist, assisted by Mr. Walter Clinton, and Miss. Mattie Allston, will give an entertainment in the Music Hall, on Monday Evening next. We clip the following from the Ottawa Times:—

A crowed Hall of ladies and gentlemen were entertained with amusement and wonder by the celebrated Prof Ashley last evening The press throughout the country have spoken so highly of Mr. Ashley's performances that it is almost needless for us to repeat their very flattering but well deserved encomiums. He has everywhere been pronounced perfect in his profession. We will not particularize any of his feats accomplished in the Music Hall last evening, but we will assure our readers that a very pleasant evening can be enjoyed by attending his entertainments. Some of is transpositions of articles appear really amazing to the uninitiated, while his manner of carrying out the entire programe of the evening is ingenously amusing. He has a very good way of entertaining his audiance. Miss Allston has a sweet voice and [illegible]

The Bobcaygeon Independent makes light of the idea of building a road to Bridgenorth, with the intention of getting the lumber traffic of the lakes; so do we, unless another road is first constructed to the front, and an extention to Bobcaygeon and Fenelon secured at an early day.

To build a road to Mud Lake, and stop there, would be equivalent to throwing so many dollar bills in the fire. What traffic would it create or secure—unless there are other means of communication with the Grand Trunk or the lakes?

It is said that the present traffic of Peterboro is too large for the Port Hope road, or at least cannot be got to market by it. Then what is the use of bringing trade this way unless when here it can be got to market immediately? but the ravings for a branch to Mud Lake is only the expressed anxiety of one, who seeks to get the outlay of a few thousand dollars, with a feint idea, perhaps, that a leaf on road making might be taken out of the Bobcaygeon road books of last year.

Our Jail.

Mr. Langmuir, Prison Inspector, visited the jail on Tuesday. He says:

"Every part of the building, together with the cells, were found to be admirably clean and neat. Having passed through the wards at night after the prisoners were locked up, the air was found to be very pure and the entire jail remarkably free from bad odors.

The tanks having failed new wooden ones, lead-lined, have been placed in the buildings as a matter of economy. The undersigned is of opinion that iron tanks would have been not only the best, but in time the cheapest. The drains which were in a defective state are also being constructed by prison labor. The condition of the prison both in respect to the state of the building and its surrounding, were in the general management of its affairs very satisfactory.

He refers to the state of a lunatic named Nancy Larkins, as very noisy and very filthy in her habits, and that her removal to Rockwood Asylum will at once take place. He says:—"The practice of keeping vagrants in continuous confinement by the renewal of the commitment prior to the expiration of the sentence, is certainly not sanctioned by the provisions of the vagrant act. An old man, Kenney aged 93, is not a proper subject for a jail, and should, if only for humane reasons, be lodged in a private house."

He also examined the Surgeons book and found the visits recorded.

Grand Junction Railway.

On Tuesday evening, pursuant to public notice of Mr. Fowler, well known as a rail way man, a large and influential meeting was held in Hill's Music Hall.

The Mayor occupied the chair and Mr. Fowler, E. Burnham, Esq., the Mayor of Cobourg, Sidney Smith and Col. Chamblias the managing director of the Cobourg and Marmora Railway and Mining Company, occupied the platform.

The Mayor gave a brief account of what the Railway Committee had done, stating that in the mean time Mr. Fowler had gone to Belleville, and was anxious to get the Grand Junction before the public he would, therefore, call on Mr. Fowler to address the meeting.

Mr. Fowler did so, at considerable length, referring to his past history in connection with railways, and especially with the branch to Millbrook, giving its history and the results. He referred to the fact that when he first came to Peterboro with a railway it was a collection of wooden huts, now it was a city of splendid brick buildings, and he was glad of it, for he thought his railway did much to bring that about. He explained the Grand Junction scheme, from Belleville to Peterboro, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls and Georgian Bay, as a very feasible scheme, and one that would benefit the county and country, but especially Peterboro, as it would be the only town on the route of the road, for the whole 140 miles. He stated, that at present, wheat cost 13 cents per bushel to Montreal; by the Grand Junction, there would be a saving of about 8 to 9 cents a bushel, as the 4 cents to Port Hope would be saved, and the Lake and River shipping would be cheap from Belleville, and there was there a fine Harbour without Harbour dues. These 8 to 9½ cents would go into the farmers' pockets, and the country would be so much the richer. Mr. Fowler concluded an able railway speech which was well received.

Mr. Dumble then moved, seconded by Mr. Wm. Hall,—

"That the Railway schemes of Cobourg and Belleville are both deserving of the careful consideration of the people of this town, as in case of the carrying out of either of them inestimable benefit would accrue to Peterborough."

In moving the resolution Mr. Dumble clearly set forth the advantages of more railway communication with the outside world, and showed how short-sighted the people of Peterboro had been a few years ago, when they refused to aid in re-opening the Cobourg road. He refered to the trade a road would create, and the advantage of it would be to the town especially a road to Georgian Bay, and urged on the people the wisdom of giving encouragement to the railway enterprises now before them.

The resolution was unanimously carried.

The next resolution was moved by Mr. E. Burnham and seconded by Mr. Hillard, as follows:—

"That in order to secure the early construction of one of these Railways, this town would be justified in granting substantial aid in case of the extension of either Railways to Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls and Georgian Bay, a bonus of $150,000 might, with propriety, be granted by Peterborough, but in case of the construction to Fenelon only, the amount [illegible]

Mr. Burnham also referred to the past railway schemes towards Peterboro, and showed how that once they could have had a railway for $60,000, it was neglected, and opposed, until they had afterwards to give $150,000 to get the branch, and even that sum be considered well spent money.

Col. Chamblins was then called for and gave a very open and satisfactory statement of the position he had taken on the railway scheme from Cobourg, and stated that as a business man, more in mining than railways, he looked at the whole thing from a business stand point,' and stated that as soon as he saw that he could secure six per cent on the capital, the company would be required to expend, he was ready to recommend the undertaking; dand he ha now, Mr. Shanly's Engineer making out an estimate of the cost of "filling in" Rice Lake. Mr. Shanly had examined the lake and taken soundings and declared the work feasible. and not at all unnecessarily costly. In a few days a report would be given, and then he Col. C. would be prepared to call a meeting of the Directors, and see what could be done.

Hon. Sidney Smith strongly urged railway enterprise and thought Peterboro should aid Mr. Fowler's scheme, and, also, the Cobourg scheme, as both roads would benefit the town of Peterboro.

His resolution was also carried unanimously. The meeting was one of the most orderly throughout, all the speakers being listened to attentively.

The East Riding Show.

Was held at Warsaw on Thursday and Friday last. The number of entries was 655—nearly the same as last year.

The articles exhibited were equal to those shown other years and the interest taken in the show by the people of Dummer, very much tended to make the show a success.

The East Riding does not yet come up to the West Riding in cattle: yet, Mr. Wm. Armstrong showed a very handsome Durham Bull not to be beaten, and Mr. Thos. Blezard showed a very fine Devon Bull, Mr. Sylvester Fife had also a nice Devon Bull.

In cows there was not so much variety. The horses were principally the same animals exhibited last year. The Draught horses could not be beaten, perhaps in the Province; and Mr. I. Garbutt, T. Bullock and Geo. Howson, had very neat serviceible carriage horses.

Sheep and Pigs were not very largely shown but there were some very nice animals, especially in small breeds, shown by Mr. A. R. Read, Robt. Fife, A McFee and Jas. Smith.

In the Fruit line—Apples of splendid quality and appearance were largely shown Messrs. Blezard, of Otonabee, Smith, Payne, Kidd and Brown. The show of apples at Warsaw abundantly demonstrates the practicability of growing abundant crops of this useful and excellent fruit.

The Butter on exhibition was all of splendid quality, and the people of Dummer were very successful in taking prizes; Messrs. Kidd, Smith and Jory, being all of that Township. In table butter, Mr. R. A. Brown, of Douro, took the first prize.

The Roots exhibited were considered very fine for the season, Potatoes Carrots and Mangolds, especially. Turnips were not largely shown, this being a very unfavorable season for that crop—the same be said of Cabbages, Cauliflowers, &c.; but, still, what was shown was of good quality.

In the Ladies' Work we cannot enter into details. The number of entries were not very numerous, and as to the successful exhibitors we refer our readers to the Prize List.

The show of Grain was considered excellent, and the quality was considered better than usual, both Wheat, Oats and Barley. Mr. Birdsall, took the first prize for Dehl Wheat. This, we believe, was some of the Canada Companys prize wheat of last year. Mr. A R. Kidd had some very fine Red Wheat which took the first prize.

Although the season has been considered very unfavorable for oats and spring crops, the oats and peas shown at Warsaw were of the best quality.

The people of Warsaw and vicinity did all that could be desired to make the show pleasant and a success, and we are glad to be able to say that they succeeded. Mr. Rackett's Band added much to the pleasure by discoursing several pieces of music. On the whole the Directors can have no regret that the show was held at Warsaw this year, as not less than 2000 people were present, and about $30 realized for tickets

The fire is still raging. No estimate of the loss can be made. At least 150,000 people are left homeless.

BUFFALO, Oct. 9, a. m.—There is still no telegraphic communications with Chicago. No trains have arrived at Cincinnati on the Michigan Central or Southern, or Illinois Central roads since yesterday.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8. 5 p.m—The awful work of destruction still goes on with relentless fury. From Harrison street in the south to Division street in the north, and from the river to the lake, an area of four miles long by one wide, flames have swept everything before them. It is estimated that at least 100,000 people are in a suffering condition. The generous offers of assistance in money, food or anything wanted are coming in from almost every city and town throughout the country by telegraph. The mayor has responded to several offers asking that cooked food be provided as soon as possible.—Firemen are on their way here from Cincinnati, St. Louis and other cities. Buildings are now being blown up on the line of fire to attempt to arrest its progress.—LATER.

It is now believed the spread of the fire southward has been stayed at Harrison street, but on the north side there is no diminution of its fury, and the entire division of the city is evidently doomed to utter destruction. There are grave fears that the flames may spread to the west side of the north branch of the river, and the inhabitants of the streets nearest the river are already moving. The Western Union Telegaph Company have now six wires working east and south, running into a temporary office on the corner of State and Sixteenth streets. The North Western Railroad Company are running trains on both its branches, which are crowded with fleeing citizens. It is now positively asserted by some that the water has been shut off form the south and west divisons on account of the quantity being used on the north side. A reliable gentleman, just arrived from the north division, brings joyful intelligence that the water works are uninjured. It is impossible to give even an approximately correct statement of the losses, but a faint idea be formed when it is stated that every bank in the city, except two small savings' institions, one on Twenty-second street in the south division, and one on Randolph street in the west division, are destroyed. All the wholesale stores, all retail establishments post office, court house, the Chamber of Commerce, every hotel in the south division, except Michigan Avenue Hotel, which is standing on the extreme southern limit escaped, though it is badly scorched. Every newspaper office, the Tribune building, which was supposed to be fire-proof, having finally succumbed, every theatre, the six large elevators, the immence depots of the Michigan Southern and the Illinois Central Railroads, both the passenger and freight depots of the latter, more than three score of churches and much of the shipping on the river—all are destroyed. Men who were millionaires yesterday morning are nearly penniless to-day; but more terrible than all this is the awful certainty that many human beings have perished—how many no one can tell, but it is known that some have perished

The latest dispatches declare the city completely in ashes. The loss is estimated at over $300,000,000. The entire city, except a few of the scattered suburbs is destroyed. Churches schools colleges, banking houses, princly mansions and mechanics humble cottages, hotels, of the most costly structure, elevators railway depots, their costly water works; in fact the whole city is burned down. Many persons, and a large number of horses and cattle have also perished. No fire of ancient or modern times, has been anything like it, in extent or loss. The whole was caused, it is said, by a cow kicking over a lamp in the stable while she was being milked, this was allowed to increase, till the firemen approached, the police neglected it, and out of the this little flames arose the terrible conflagration. The burned district covers 3,000 acres. The loss is not less than $150,000,000, and some estimated it at twice that amount. The population of the city was six times that of Toronto, and the loss is over five times the assessed value of Toronto. To give even a faint discription of the fire or loss would be in vain, next week we will give it more fully.

CHOICE LITERATURE FROM THE CONSERVATIVE PRESS:—We clip the following from an exchange that teams with weekly abuse of George Brown and the grits:

"Our superlatively egotistic brither of the Expositor makes an ass of himself in his broad-sheet of yesterday, by endeavouring, in the most puerile and foolish manner, to detract from the success of the late meeting of the Moderate Conservatives of Brant.

How politely the Conservatives organs treat their opponents! But, of course, all is right that they do.

Thomas' Eclectric Oil! Worth Ten Times its Weight in Gold. Do you know anything of it? If not, it is time you did.

Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest Medicine ever made. One dose cures common Sore Throat. One bottle has cured Bronchitis. Fifty cents worth has cured an Old Standing Cough. One or two bottles cures bad cases of Piles and Kidney Troubles. Six to eight applications cure any case of Excoriated Nipples or Inflamed Breast. One bottle has cured Lame Back of eight years standing. Daniel Plank, of Brookfield, Tioga County, Pa., says: "I went thirty miles for a bottle of your Oil, which effected a Wonderful Cure of a Crooked Limb by six applications." Another, who has had Asthma for years, says: "I have half of a 50 cent bottle left, and $100 would not buy it if I could get no more."

Reine Robinson, of Wanda, N. Y., writes: "One small bottle of your Eclectric Oil restored the voice where the person had not spoken above a whisper in Five Years." Rev. J. Mallory, of Wyoming, N. Y., writes: "Your Eclectric Oil cured me of Bronchitis in One Week." Dealers all over the country say "We have never sold a medicine that has given such complete satisfaction as this."

It is composed of Six of the Best Oils that are known. Is as good to take as for external use, and is believed to be immeasurably superior to anything ever made. Will save you much suffering and many dollars of expense. Is sold by one or more dealers in every place. Price, 25 cents.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from its cures, many of which are truly marvellous. Invet erate cases of scrofulous disease, where the system seemed saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were engendered by the scrofulous contamination until they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cured in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, the unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed motion throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develops into one or other of its Eideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparilla to be advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Tits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Uterous affections of the muscular and nervous system.

Syphilitic Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhœa or Whites, Ulcerous Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Dyspepsia and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matter in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Torpidity, Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Dyspeptic, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the effects of Unchastity or Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.

The Watch at the Sepulchre.

"Now when the Centurion and they that were with him watching Jesus, saw the earthquake and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God."

"So they went and made the Sepulchre secure, sealing the stone and setting a watch." St. Matt. 27th chapter, 64 and 66th verses.

The Roman Centurion in charge of the Watch being asked the question, "Are you not afraid to Watch?" answers as follows:—

"From East to West
I've marched beneath the Eagles;
From Pontus unto Gaul,
Kept many a watch,
On which by death surrounded,
I've seen each comrade fall."

"Fear! I could laugh
Until these rocks re-echoed,
To think that I should fear—
(Who have met death
In every form unshrinking—)
To watch this dead KING here."

"In Dorian forests
Sitting by our watch fire
I've kept the wolves at bay;
On Phebian Alps—
Escaped the icy avalanche
Close where our Legion lay."

On moonless nights
Upon the sands of Libya
I've watch'd with shield firm set
And heard the lion roar,—
In this forearm
The tigers teeth hath met."

"I was star gazing
When he stole upon me,
Until I felt his breath,
And saw his jewel eyes gleam;
Then he seized me
And instant met his death."

"My weapon in
His thick veined neck I buried,
My feet his warm blood dyed;
And then I bound my wounded arm
And till the morning,
Lay crouched upon his side."

"If the "Olympian Jove"
Awoke in thunder,
His great eyes I could meet.
But, HIS, if once again
They look'd upon me
Would strike me to his feet."

"HE look'd as if
My brother hung there bleeding,
And put my soul to shame.—
As if my mother
With HIS eyes were pleading,
And pity overcame."

"But could not save:—
HE who in death was hanging
On the accursed tree;
Was HE "the Son of God?"
For so in dying
HE seemed to die for me."

And all my bloody
Deeds came up before me,
Gazed at me, from his face.
What!!—if HE should rise again
And I should meet HIM.
How AWFUL is THIS PLACE."

"Here, though the stars
Are veiled,—the peaceful City
Lies at our feet asleep;
Round us the still more peaceful
Dead are lying
In slumber yet more deep."

"A low wind moaning,
Glides among the olves
'Till every hillside sighs;
But round us here the moaning
Seems to muster
And gather where HE lies."

And through the darkness faint,
Pale gleams are flying
That touch this hill alone;
Whence these unearthly lights?
And whence the shadows?
That move upon the stone.

Pink and White Tyranny.

BY MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

CHAPTER I.

FALLING IN LOVE.

"Who is that beautiful creature!" said John Seymour, as a light, sylph-like form tripped up the steps of the verandah of the hotel where he was lounging away his summer vacation.

"That! Why, don't you know, man? That is the celebrated, the divine Lillie Ellis, the most adroit 'fisher of men' that has been seen in our days."

"By George, but she's pretty, though!" said John, following with enchanted eyes the distant motions of the sylphide.

The vision that he saw was of a delicate little fairy form; a complexion off of pearly white, with a cheek of the hue of a pink shell; a fair, sweet, infantine face, surrounded by a fleecy radiance of soft golden hair. The vision appeared to float in some white gauzy robes; and, when she spoke or smiled, what an innocent fresh, untouched, unspoiled look there was upon her face! John gazed, and thought of all sorts of poetical similes of a "daisy just wet with morning dew;" of a "violet by a mossy stone;" in short, of all the things that poets have made and provided for the use of young gentlemen in the way of falling in love.

This John Seymour was about as good and honest a man as there is going in this world of ours. He was a generous, just, manly, religious young fellow; he was heir to a large, solid property; he was a well-read lawyer, established in a flourishing business; he was a man that all the world spoke well of. The only duty to society which John had left as yet unperformed was that of matrimony. Three and thirty years had passed; and, with every advantage for supporting a wife, with a charming home all ready for a mistress, John, as yet, had not proposed to be the defender and provider for any of the more helpless portion of creation. The cause of this was, in the first place, that John was very happy in the society of a sister, a little older than himself, who managed his house admirably, and was a charming companion to his leisure hours; and, in the second place, that he had a secret, bashful self-depreciation in regard to his power of pleasing women, which made him ill at ease in their society. Not that he did not mean to marry. He certainly did. But the fair being that he was to marry was a distant ideal, a certain undefined and cloud-like creature; and, up to this time, he had been waiting to meet her, without taking any definite steps towards that end. To say the truth, John Seymour, like many other outwardly solid, sober-minded, respectable citizens, had deep within him—if a little private bit of romance. He could not utter it, he never talked it; he would have blushed and stammered and stuttered wofully, and made a very poor figure, in trying to tell any one about it; but, nevertheless it was there, a secluded chamber of imagery, and the future Mrs. John Seymour formed its principal ornament.

The wife that John had imaged, his dream-wife, was not at all like his sister; though he loved his sister heartily, and thought her one of the best and noble women that could possibly be.

But his sister was all plain prose,—good, strong, earnest, respectable prose, it is true, but yet prose. He could read English history with her, talk accounts and business with her, discuss politics with her, and valued her opinions on all these topics as much as any man of his acquaintance. But, with the visionary Mrs. John Seymour aforesaid, he never seemed to himself to be either reading history or settling accounts, or talking politics; he was off with her in some sort of enchanted cloudland of happiness, where she was all to him, and he to her,—a sort of rapture of protective love on one side, and of confiding devotion on the other, quite inexpressible, and that John would not have talked for the world.

So when he saw this distant vision of airy gauzes, of pearly whiteness, of seashell pink, of infantine smiles, and waving, golden curls, he stood up with a shy desire to approach the wonderful creature, and yet with a sort of embarrassed feeling of being very awkward and clumsy. He felt, somehow, as if he were a great, coarse, behemoth; his arms seemed to him awkward appendages; his hands suddenly appeared to him rough, and his fingers swelled and stumpy. When he thought of asking an introduction, he felt himself growing very hot, and blushing to the roots of the hair.

"Want to be introduced to her, Seymour;" said Carrol Ethridge. "I'll trot you up. I know her."

"No, thank you," said John, stiffly. In his heart he left an absurd anger at Carryl for the easy, assured way in which he spoke of the sacred creature who seemed to him something too divine to be lightly talked of. And then he saw Carryl marching up to her with his air of easy assurance. He saw the bewitching smile come over that fair, flowery face; he saw Carryl, with unabashed familiarity, take her fan out of her hand, look at it as if it were a mere common, earthly fan, toss it about, and pretend to fan himself with it.

"I didn't know he was such a puppy!" said John to himself, as he stood in a sort of angry bashfulness, envying the man that was familiar with that loveliness.

Ah! John, John! You wouldn't for the world have told to man or woman what a fool you were at that moment.

"What a fool I am!" was his mental commentary: "just as if it was anything to me," and he turned and walked to the other end of the veranda.

"I think you've hooked another fish Lillie," said Belle Trevors, in the ear of the little divinity.

"Who.....?"

"Why! that Seymour there, at the veranda. He is looking at you, do you know? He is rich, very rich, and of an old family. Didn't you see how he started and looked after you when you came up to the veranda?"

"Oh! I saw him plain enough," said the divinity, with one of her unconscious, baby-like smiles.

"What are you ladings talking?" said Carryl Ethridge.

"Oh, secrets!" said Belle Trevore.—"You are very presuming, sir, to inquire."

"Mr. Ethridge," said Lillie Ellis "don't you think it would be nice to promenade?"

This was said with such a pretty coolness, such a quiet composure as showed Miss Lillie to be quite mistress of the situation; there was, of course, no sort of design in it.

Et'ridge offered his arm at once; and he two sauntered to the end of the veranda, where John Seymour was standing.

The blood rushed in hot currents over him, and he could hear the beating of his heart: he felt somehow as if the hour of his fate was coming. He had a wild desire to retreat, and put it off.—He looked over the end of the veranda, with some vague idea of leaping it; but alas! it was ten feet above ground, and a lover's leap would have ticketed him as out of his head. There was nothing for it but to meet his distiny like a man.

Carryl came up, the lady on his arm; and as he stood there for a moment, in the coolest, most indifferent tone in the world, said, "Oh! by the by, Miss Ellis, let me present my friend, Mr. Seymour."

The die was cast.

John's face burned like fire; he muttered something about "being happy to make Miss Ellis's acquaintance," looking all the time as if he would be glad to jump over the railing, or take the wings and fly, to get rid of the happiness.

Miss Ellis was a belle by profession, and she understood her business perfectly. In nothing did she show herself master of her craft, more than in the adroitness with which she could soothe the bashful pangs of new votaries, and place them on an easy footing with her.

"Mr. Seymour," she said affably, "to tell the truth, I have been desirous of the honor of making your acquaintance, ever since I saw you in the breakfast-room this morning."

"I am sure I am very much flattered, said John his heart beating thick and fast. "May I ask why you honored me with such a wish?"

"Well to tell the truth, because you strikingly resemble a very dear friend of mine," said Miss Ellis, with her sweet, unconscious simplicity of manner.

"I am still more flattered," said John with a quicker beating of the heart; only I fear that you may find me an unpleasant contrast."

"Oh! I think not," said Lillie, with another smile; "we shall soon be good friends too, I trust."

"I trust so certainly," said John, earnestly.

Belle Trevose now joined the party, and the four were soon chatting together on the best footing of acequaintance. John was delighted to feel himself already on easy terms with the fair vision.

"You have not been here long?" said Lillie to John.

"No, I have just arrived,"

"And you were never here before?"

"No, Miss Ellis, I am entirly now to the place."

"I am an old habitues here," said Lillie, and can recommend myself as authority on all points connected with it,"

"Then," said John, "I hope you will take me under your tuition."

"Certainly, free of charge," she said with another ravishing smile.

"You haven't seen the boiling spring yet?" she added.

"No, I haven't seen anything yet."

"Well, then, if you'll give me your arm across the lawn, I'll show it to you."

All this was done in the easiest, most matter-of-course manner in the world; and off they started, John in a flutter of flattered delight at the gracious acceptance accorded him.

Ethridge and Belle Travors looked after them with a nod of intelligence at each other.

"Hooked, by George!" said Ethridge.

"Well it'll be a good thing for Lillie, won't it?"

"For her! Oh, yes a capital thing for her!"

"Well for him, too."

"Well, I don't know. John is a pretty nice fellow; besides being rich, and all that; and Lillie is somewhat shop-worn by this time. Let me see: she must be seven and twenty."

"Oh, yes, she's all that!" said Belle, with ingenious ardor. "Why, she was in society while I was a school-girl! Yes, dear Lillie is certainly twenty-seven, if not more; but she keeps her freshness wonderfully."

"Well she looks fresh enough, I suppose, to a good, honest, artless fellow like John Seymour, who knows as little of the world as a milkmaid. John is a great, innocent, country steer, fed on clover and dew; and as honest and ignorant of all sorts of naughty, wicked things as his mother or sister. He takes Lillie in a sacred simplicity quite refreshing; but to me Lillie is played out. I know her like a book. I know all her smiles and wiles, advice and devices; and her system of tactics is an old story with me. I shan't interrupt any of her little games. Let her have her little field all to herself; it's time she was married, to be sure."

Meanwhile, John was being charmingly ciceroned by Lillie, and scarcely knew whether he was in the body or out. All that he felt, and felt with a sort of wonder, was that he seemed to be acceptable and pleasing in the eyes of this little fairy, and that she was leading him into wonderland.

They went not only to the boiling spring, but up and down so many wild woodland paths that had been cut for the adornment of the Carmel Springs, and so well pleased were both parties, that it was supper-time before they reappeared on the lawn; and when they did appear, Lillie was leaning confidentially on John's arm, with a wreath of woodbine in her hair that he had arranged there, wondering all the while at his own wonderful boldness, and at the grace of the fair entertainer.

The returning couple were seen from the windows of Mrs. Chit, who sat on the lookout for useful information; and who forthwith ran to the apartment of Mrs. Chat, and told her to look out at them.

Billy This, who was smoking his cigar on the verandah, immediately ran and called Harry That to look at them, and laid a bet at once that Lillie had "hooked" Seymour.

"She'll have him, by George, she will!"

"Oh, pshaw! she is always hooking fellows, but you see she don't get married," said matter-of-fact Harry.

"It won't come to any thing, now, I'll bet. Everybody said she was engaged to Danforth, but it all ended in smoke.

Whether it would be an engagement, or would all end in smoke, was the talk of Carmel Springs for the next two weeks.

At the end of that time, the mind of Carmel Springs was relieved by the announcement that it was an engagement.

The important deciding announcement was first authentically made by Lillie to Belle Trevors, who had been invited into her room that night for the purpose.

"Well, Belle, it's all over. He spoke out to night,"

"He offered himself!"

"Certainly."

"And you took him."

"Of course I did: I should be fool not to."

"Oh, so I think, decidedly" said Belle, kissing her friend in a rapture. "You dear creature! how nice! it's splendid!"

Lillie took the embrace with her usual sweet composure, and turned to her looking-glass, and began taking down her hair for the night. It will be perceived that this young lady was not overcome with emotion, but in a perfectly collected state of mind.

"He's a little bald and getting rather stout," she said reflectively, "but he'll do."

"I never saw a creature so dead in love as he is," said Belle.

A quiet smile passed over the soft, peach-blow, as Lillie answered,—

"Oh, dear, yes! He perfectly worships the ground I tread on."

"Lil, you fortunate creature, you! Positively it's the best match that there has been about here this summer. He's rich, of an old, respectable family; and he has got good principles, you know, and all that," said Belle.

"I think he's nice myself," said Lillie, as she stood brushing out a golden tangle of curls. "Dear me!" she added, "how much better he is than that Danforth! Really! Danforth was a little to horrid; his teeth were dreadful. Do you know, I should have had something of a struggle to take him, though he was so terribly rich! Then Danforth had been horribly dissipated—you dont know—Maria Sanford told me such shocking things about him, and she knows they are true. Now, I don't think John has ever been dissipated."

"Oh, no," said Belle. "I heard all about him. He joined the church when he was only t enty, and has been always spoken of as a perfect model. I only think you may find it a little slow, living in Springdale. He has a fine, large, old-fashioned house there, and his sister is a very nice woman; but they are a sort of respectable, retired set—never go into fashionable company."

"Oh, I don't mind it!" said Lillie. "I shall have things my own way, I know. One isn't obliged to live in Springdale, nor with pokey old sister, you know; and John will do just as I say, and live where I please."

She said this with her simple, soft air of perfect assurance, twisting her shower of bright, golden curls; with her gentle, childlike face, and soft, beseeching blue eyes, and dimpling little mouth, looking back on her, out of the mirror. By these the little queen had always ruled from her cradle, and should she not rule now? Was it any wonder that John was half out of his wits with joy at the thought of possessing her? Simply and honestly, she thought not. He was to be congratulated; thought it wasn't a bad thing for her, either.

"Belle," said Lillie, after an interval of reflection, "I won't be married in white satin—that I'm resolved on. Now," she said, facing round with great earnestness, "there have been five weddings in our set and all the girls have been married in just the same dress—white satin and paint lace, over and over, till I'm tired of it. I'm determined I'll have something new."

"Well, I would I'm sure," said Belle. "Say white tulle, for instance; you know you are so petite and fairy-like."

"No: I shall write out to Madame La Roche, and tell her she must get up something wholly original. I shall send for my whole trousseau. Papa will be glad enough to come down, since he gets me off his hands, and no more fuss about bills, you know. Do you know, Belle, that creature is just wild about me; he'd like to ransack all the jeweller's shops in New York for me. He's going up to-morrow, just to choose the engagement ring. He says he can't trust to an order; that he must go and choose one worthy of me."

"Oh! it's plain enough that that game is all in your hands, as to him, Lillie; but Lil, what will your cousin Harry say to all this?"

"Well if course he won't like it; but I can't help it if he don't. Harry ought to know that it's all nonsense for him and me to think of marrying. He does know it."

"To tell the truth, I always thought, Lil, you were more in love with Harry than anybody you ever knew."

Lillie laughed a little, and then the prettiest sweet-pea flush deepened the pink of her cheeks.

"To say the truth, Belle, I could have been, if I had been in circumstances to marry. But, you see, I am of those to whom the luxuries are essential. I never could rub, and scrub and work; in fact, I had rather not live at all than live poor; and Harry is poor, and he always will be poor. It's a pity, too, poor fellow, for he's nice. Well he's off in India! I know he will be tragical and gloomy, and all that," she said; and than the soft child-like face smiled to itself in the glass—such a pretty little innocent smile!

All this while, John sat up with his heart beating very fast, writing all about his engagement to his sister, and up to this point, his nearest, dearest, most confidential friend. It is almost too bad to copy the letter of a shy man who feels himself in love for the first time in his life; but we venture to make an extract:—

"It is not her beauty merely that draws me to her, though she is the most beautiful human being I ever saw; it is the exquisite feminine softness and delicacy of her character, that sympathetic pliability by which she adopts herself to every varying feeling of the heart. You, my dear sister, are the noblest of woman, and your place in my heart is still what it always was; but I feel that this dear little creature, while she fills a place no other has ever entered, will yet be a new bond to unite us. She will love us both; she will gradually come into our ways and opinions, and be insensibly formed by us into noble womanhood. Her extreme beauty, and the great admiration that has always followed her, have exposed her many temptations, and caused most ingenerous things to be said of her.

"Hitherto she has lived only in the fashionable world; and her literary and domestic education, as she herself is sensible, has been somewhat neglected.

"But she longs to retire from all this; she is sick of fashionable folly, and will come to us to be all our own. Gradually the charming circle of cultivated families which form our society will elevate her taste; and form her mind.

Love is woman's inspiration, and love will lead her to all that is noble and good. My dear sister, think not that any new ties are going to make you any less to me, or touch your place in my heart. I have already spoken of you to Lillie, and she longs to know you. You must be to her what you have always been to me,—guide, philosopher, and friend.

"I am sure I never felt better impressed, more humble, more thankful, more religious than I do now. That the happiness of this dear, gentle, fragile creature is to be henceforth in my hands is to me a solemn and inspiring thought. What man is worthy of a refined, delicate woman! I feel my unworthiness of her every hour; but, so help me God, I shall try to be all to her that a husband should be to you, my sister, I know, will help me to make happy the future which she so confidently trusts to me.

"Believe me, dear sister, I never was so much your affectionate brother,

JOHN SEYMOUR.

"P. S.—I forgot to tell you that Lillie remarkably resembles the ivory miniature of our dear sainted mother. She was very much affected when I told her of it. I think naturally Lillie was very much such a character as our mother, though circumstances, in her case, have been unfavourable to the development of it."

Whether the charming vision was realised; whether the little sovereign now enthroned will be just and clement one; what immunities and privileges she will allow to her slaves,—is yet to be seen in this history.

CHAPTER II.

WHAT SHE THINKS OF IT.

Springdale was one of those beautiful rural towns whose flourishing aspect is a striking exponent of the peculiarities of New England life. The ride through it presents a refreshing picture of wide, cool, grassy streets, overhung with green arches of elm, with rows of large handsome houses on either sides, each standing back from the street, in its own retired square of gardens, green turf, shady trees, and flowering shrubs. It was, so to speak, a little city of country-seats. It spoke of wealth, thrift, leisure cultivation, quiet, thoughtful habits, and moral tastes.

Some of these mansions were of ancestral reputation, and had been in the family whose name they bore for generations back; a circumstance sometimes occurring even in New England towns where neither law nor custom unites to perpetuate property in certain family lines.

The Seymour house was a well known, respected mansion for generations back. Old Judge Seymour, the grandfather, was the lineal descendant of Parson Seymour; the pastor who first came with the little colony of Springdale; when it was founded as a church in the wilderness, amid all the dangers of wild beasts and Indians.

This present Seymour mansion was founded on the spot where the house of the first minister was built by the active hands of his parishioners; and from generation to generation, order, piety, education, and high respectability had been the tradition of the place.

The reader will come in with us, on this bright June morning, through the grassy front yard, which has only the New-England fault of being too densely shaded. The house we enter has a wide, cool hall running through its centre and out into a back garden, now all aglow with every beauty of June. The broad alleys at the garden showed bright stores of all sorts of good old-fashioned flowers, well tended and kept. Clumps of stately hollyhocks and scarlet peonies; roses of every hue, purple, blush, gold color, and white, were showering down their leaves on the grassy turf; honeysuckles climbed and clamored over arbors; and great stately trees of virgin white lillies exalted their majestic heads in stately magnificence. The garden was Miss Grace Seymour's delight and pride. Every root in it was fragrant with the invisible blossoms of memory—memories of the mother who loved, and planted and watched them before her, and the grandfather who had cared for them before that. The spirit of these charming old-fashioned gardens is the spirit of family love; and if ever blessed souls from their better home feel drawn back to anything on earth, we think it must be to their flower garden.

Miss Grace had been up early, and now, with her garden hat on, and cissors in hand was coming up the steps with her apron full of roses, white lillies meadow sweets, and honey suckle, for the parlour vases, when the servant handed her a letter.

"From John," she said, "good fellow," and then she laid it on the mantel-shelf of the parlour, while she busied herself in arranging her flowers.

"I must get these into water or they will wilt," she said.

The large parlour was like many you and I have seen in a certain class of respectable houses,—white, cool, shady, and with a mellow old tone to everything in its furniture and belongings. It was a parlour of the past, and not of to-day yet exquisitely neat and well kept. The Turkey carpet was faded; it had been part of the wedding furnishing of Graces mother years ago. The great, wide, motherly, chintz-covered sofa, which filled a recess commanding the window, was as different as possible from any smart wooden article of the name. The heavy, claw-footed, mahogany chairs, the tall clock that ticked in one corner, the footstools and ottomans in faded embroidery, all spoke of days past. So did the portraits on the wall. One was a fair, rosy young girl, in a white gown, with powdered hair dressed high over a cushion. It was the portrait of Grace's mother. Another was that of a minister in gown and bands, with black-silk gloved hands holding on conspicuously a large Bible This was the remote ancestor, the minister. Then there was the picture of John's father, placed lovingly where the eyes seemed always to be following the sight, white-robed figure of the young wife. The walls were prepared with an old fashioned paper of a peculiar pattern, bought in France seventy-five years before. The vases of India-china that adorned the mantels, the framed engravings of architecture and pictures in Rome, all were memorials of the taste of those long passed way. Yet the room had a fresh, sweet, sociable air. The roses and honeysuckles looked in at the windows; the table covered with books and magazines, and the familiar work-basket of Miss Grace, with its work, gave a sort of impression of modern household life. It was a wide, open, hospitable, generous-minded room, that seemed to breath a fragrance of invitation and general sociability; it was a room full of associations and memories, and its daily arrangement and ornamentations made one of the pleasant tasks of Miss Grace's life.

She spread down a newspaper on the large, square center-table, and emptying her aprenful of flowers upon it, took her vases from the shelf, and with her scissors sat down to the task of clipping and arranging them.

Just then Lettie Ferguson came across the garden, entered after her, with a knot of choice roses in her hand, and a plate of seed-cakes covered with hem-stitched napkin. The Fergusons and the Seymours occupied adjoining houses, and were on footing of the most perfect undress intimacy. They crossed each other's gardens they came without knocking at each other's doors twenty times a day apropos to any bit of chit-cat they might have, a question to ask, a passage in a book to show, a household receipt that they had been trying. Lettie was the most intimate and confidential friend of Grace. In fact, the whole Ferguson family seemed like another portion of the Seymour family. There were two daughters, of which Lettie was the oldest. Then came the youngest Rose, a nice, charming, well-informed, good girl, always cheerful and chatty and with a decent share of ability at talking lively nonsense. The brothers of the family, like the young men of New England country towns generally, were off in the world seeking their fortunes. Old Judge Ferguson was a gentleman of the old school,—formal, stately polite always complimentary to ladies, with a pleasant little budget of old gentlemanly hobbies and prejudices, which it afforded him the greatest pleasure to air in the society of his friends. Old Mrs. Ferguson was a pattern of motherliness, with her quaint old fashioned dress, her elaborated care, her daily and minute inquiries after the health of all he acquaintance, and the tender pityingness of her nature for everything that lived and breathed in this world of sin and sorrow.

Lettie and grace, as two older sisters of families, had a peculiar intimacy, and discussed everything together, from the mode of clearing jelly up to the profoundest problems of science and morals. They were both charming, well mannered, well educated, well-read woman, and trusted each other to the uttermost with every thought and feeling and purposes of their hearts.

As we have said Lettie Ferguson came in at the back door without knocking, and, coming softly behind Miss Grace, laid down her bunch of roses among the flowers, and then set down her plate of seed cakes.

Then she said, "I have brought you some specimens of my Souvenir de Mariage buns, and my first trial of your receipt."

"Oh, thanks!" said Miss Grace: how charming these roses are! It was too bad to spoil your hash, though."

"No; it does it good to cut them; it will flower all the more. But try one of those cakes—are they right?"

"Excellent! you have hit it exactly," said Grace; "exactly the right proportion of seeds. I'm hurrying," she added, "to get these flowers in water, because a letter from John is waiting to be read."

(To be continued)

FRUIT CULTURE.—The Country Gentleman sums up a few leading points in fruit culture in the following comprehensive remarks:

"1. Instead of 'trimming up' trees, according to the old fashion, to make them long legged and long nosed, trim them down, so as to make them even, snug, and symmetrical.

"2. Instead of manuring heavily in a small circle, at the foot of the tree, spread the manure, if needed at all, broadcast over the whole surface.

"3. Instead of spading a circle about the stem, cultivate the whole surface broadcast.

"4. Prefer a well pulverized surface in an orchard, a moderately rich soil, to heavy manuring, and a surface covered with a hard crust and weeds of grass.

"5. Remember it is better to set out ten trees with all the necessary care to make them live and flourish than to set out a hundred trees and have them all die from carelessness.

"6. Remember that tobacco is a poison, and will kill insects rapidly if properly applied to them, and is one of the best drugs for freeing trees rapidly of small vermin; and is better used in this way than to make men repulsive and diseased.

IN Greeley, Colorado, no whiskey can be found for love or money. Every deed for the purchase of land to ruin a cause mollifying the instrument should intoxicating liquors be manufactured, sold, or given away in any place of public resort on the premises, as a beverage. But if whiskey cannot be had ammonia can be, and Greeley ammonia is said to have so wonderful a resemblance to ordinary whiskey that the best experts cannot distinguish between them.

Never be ashamed of confessing your ignorance, for the wisest man upon earth is ignorant of many things, in much that what he knows is a mere nothing in comparison to what he does not know. But we apprehend very few are the ignorant of the wonderful effects of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," it is most sharp and rapid cure for colds, rheumatism, pleurisy, chills, cholera morbus, and all summer complaints. Sold by all medicine dealers.

THE EMINENT DIVINE says, "I have been using the Peruvian syrup. It gave me new life, a recovery of spirits absolutely of music." J. P. Dinsmore, 36 Dey Street, New York, will send free, a pamphlet of 32 pages containing a full account of the remarkable medicine, to any one sending him their address.

Two or three colds in succession will, with many constitutions, seriously establish the seeds of consumption in the system, thus converting what was the originally a simple, curable affection, into one generally fatal. Ordinary prudence therefore makes it the business of everyone to take care of a cold until it is got rid of. Fortunately "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers" are thoroughly adapted to remove speedily all coughs and colds and are equally efficacious in primary stages of consumption, asthma and bronchitis. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts. per box.

AMONGST the symtoms of Consumption which present themselves as the disease progresses, are cold chills, coughs, shortness of breath, pain at night, loss of appetite, loss of flesh, night sweats, hectic, expectoration of white mucous, pellets, also yellow and bluish gray matter, sometimes streaked with blood; burning pains in the chest, diminish general prostration and incapacity for the ordinary duties of life. As the patient proceeds reduced, other complications appear and he rapidly sinks. A remarkable and very common physical sign among consumptives in their exemption from alarm; notwithstanding the dangerous character of their disease they believe in ultimate recovery. This very confidence prevents the patients from resorting to the only means of cure, and that watchfulness necessary in so critical a time, for it finally runs into hopeless recovery. Like the Brahmin to our boatman that poured down from Erie; broad and smooth was the river, rapid its progress, and pleasant his and pain. Alas, the ride that drifted him so rapidly was one of destruction, and when he would retrace his way he found the current too strong to stem, and that he drew nearer every instant to the mighty Niagara. Down, down he was carried amid the seething spray and with his bark was dashed to pieces.

The consumptive is admonished to resort to Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites, when the first symptom presents itself, as it is the only sure remedy.

Pratt vs Scott—referred.

Pratt vs Scott. A second case; also referred.

McNichol vs Healy. Verdict by consent for plf. Scott for plf.; Cassels for deft.

Ryan vs. Wilson: by the Judge. Verdict. Edmison for plf.; Weller for deft,

Green vs. Buck: by a Jury. A Trespass case—taking timber off a lot in Dummer. This was a kind of a double case against father and son. The father had paid $100 into court, acknowledging damages; the son pleaded that that he had no interest in the logs whatever. Held that J. A. Buck was not interested. The case then of T. Buck was tried, when the jury rendered a verdict for defts., as he had writings of the timber which he believed good.

Dumble vs. White.—This was a case brought by an Assignee to obtain possession of the goods of an insolvent, which Mr. Whyte claimed under a Chattel Mortgage. Verdict for def., with leave to move to enter verdict for plf.; the Counsel agreeing that in case of verdict for plf., the goods are to be returned or their value paid. Weller for plf; Denniston for deft,

Several other cases were referred, or left to be tried by the County Judge.

The Court only lasted two days.

The Grand Jury spoke in the most favorable terms of the manner in which the Jail is kept, and that the prisoners had no complaints whatever.

The Chicago Fire.

We partly hoped that the report of the Chicago fires were overdrawn by reporters, but we regret to find that the worst was not told even.

The latest details of the great fire vary a little from the first reports, as recorded. The fire originated at the corner of Halstead street and Canal Port Avenue in the south-western quarter of the city, and about two and a half miles distant from the City Hall. It seems that late on Sunday evening a boy went into a stable on Dehoven street, near the west side, to milk a cow, carrying with him a kerosene lamp. This was kicked over by the cow and the burning fluid scattered among the straw. This was the begining of the great fire, and it first showed itself in the neighbourhood of small lager beer saloons and tenement houses.

It extended over 6 square miles of the city and has therefore destroyed the whole of the business part of it. The loss is estimated at over $300,000,000, but of course, a large part of this is covered by insurance, several of the offices are complecely ruined, while others will be so crippled that only the best of management will enable them to continue business.

Chicago however is not the only place that has suffered by fire within a few days. We regret to learn that the people of Windsor have suffered very much by the fire which occured in that town on Thursday. One third of the business part of the Town has been destroyed, and the loss foots up to $200,000. It is asserted that the losses exceed the amount of insurance by at least $80,000.

There have been extensive fires in Michigan.

News from Saint Clair and Huron counties is of the most distressing character. All that portion of the State east of Saginaw Bay, and north for about forty miles about Port Huron, has been completly swept by fire. A number of persons perished, and it is feared we have not heard the worst.—The flourishing villages of Forestville, White Rock, Elm Creek, Sand Beach, and Huron City are entirly destroyed. In all these towns there were large stores, many of which were filled with winter stock—extensive saw mills, shingle mills, and docks covered with lumber—all of which are swept away. It is said there is but one dock left on shore about Forestville.

Large fires are reported in half a dozen places in Michigan. There has been no telegraphic or railroad communication with the Siginaw valley since last night in consequence of these conflagrations. The village of Holland, Ottawa Co., was intirely destroyed by the fire to-day.

The conflagrations in the prairies of Minnesota and the forests of Wisconsin show no signs of dimunition, but, according to the latest telegrams, are increasing in extent and destructiveness.

The present loses by fire are unparalleled in the history of the past, and let us hope that the future may never witness their equal.

Professor Wild's Lecture

We are pleased to be able to announce that the Rev. Dr. Wild will deliver the first of his popular lectures, on the 31st instant, in the Music Hall. The subject—"Babel." The lecture treats on the dispersion of the human race. The Indians, and who they are; and that they are not the first inhabitants of this continent. The time place and origin of Freemasonry. How the Negro became black, the Indian red, and the White man White, and other interesting topics. Opinions of the press where Dr. Wild has lectured:—

We had the pleasure of listening last night to the ingenious and entertaining lecture of the Rev, Dr. Wild. He is a very fluent speaker. He held the attention of a large and intelligent audience enchained, as if by mesmeric spell, for fully an hour and a half; and when he intimated his intention of concluding his address, there arose from every part of the Hall an eager shout of "goon!" He is an original lecturer.—Ottawa 'Citizen.'

The Rev. Joseph Wild, Professor of Hebrew, Albert College, Belleville, delievered his lecture last night, in the City Hall, in aid of the funds of that College. Though personally unknow to our citizens, the Rev. gentleman's fame as a lecturer drew together a large audience, who listened with delight to his discourse, and testified their appreciation by frequent and hearty applause. His Worship Mayor Gaydon presided. During a discourse of nearly two hours, Dr. Wild held the audience in wrapt attention, and when he closed he received very loud appalase. The lecture was certainly one of the most interesting ever deliovered in the Hall.—London 'Free Press."

LECTURE.—The Rev. Jos. Wild delivered in Neilson's Hall, on Friday evening last, another exceedingly interesting and instructive lecture. Those who attended were fortunate and were well repaid. The Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, many going away unable to obtain admittance. The fact is, although Dr. Wild has lectured that he will fiill Neilson's Hall at any time he might appear in that capacity. Belleville 'Chronical.'

MR. WILD'S LECTURES.—Two lectures have been delivered in the towns of Hancock and Houghton, which, for uniqueness of style, fervency of delivery, and true originality, we have seldom, if ever, heard equalled. We can most heartily congratulate those who were present at the great treat presented them, and commisserate such as failed to enjoy the rich intellectual repast offered to their understanding. We cannot enter into a resume of the great gentleman's lectures; indeed we was so throughly interested and enchanted with the wonderful, vivid and startling thoughts set before us, that we could not afford to lose an idea in attempting a report of what was said. The greatest and most pleasing feature of Mr. Wild's lectures is, as we judge, he leaves the well worn and oft trodden tracks in which so many popular lecturers travel, and leads us into a field not yet explored, by a way we have not known, and leaves us with food for thought for many days.—Portage Lake Mining Gazette, Mich.

The West Riding Fall Show.

The Show in the West Riding, on Friday and Saturday, was considered very successful. The sums received for tickets to the Drill Shed exceeded $200, we understand. The roots, fruit, grain, butter and cheese were superior.

In implements, Messrs. Whyte & Davis took prizes for ploughs, straw cutters and smut machine, all of good workmanship.

Mr. P. Hamilton, also, obtained a prize for ploughs.

Messrs. Donnelly, and W. H. Mitchell showed some excellent articles in the harness line, and White & McCullagh, in the boot and shoes some very nice work, indeed.

Lockhart & Chowen showed some handsome buggies, &c., and obtained prizes.

The show of Ladies' Work and Fine Arts was better than usual. Some very beautiful work, ornamental or useful, was shown.

The Shed, however, is not well enough lighted for such occasions, and the arrangements for poultry was not what it should be.

We noticed a new idea, that of a hand grain sower, turned by a crank, shown by Mr Keelaher, of Otonabee. A man, it is said, can sow 20 feet on each side of him, as he walks along, and, we understand, that those whose have tried it affirm that the work is done very evenly.

If possible, we may return to the Shows next week, and try and draw a comparison between those we have visited this season, but our readers will feel there are shows enough this week.

Husband:—Did it cure any Rheumatism about here, I'm more interested in that than I am in fever and ague.

Wife:—You had better go over to Judge Jones and see the certificates for yourself, for there is no question but that they are convincing and I don't think he has returned them yet to Providence R. I. where Perry Davis & Son's head office is.

Husband:—I am realy getting interested in the PAIN-KILLER, my dear, and I will call on the Judge to day for my rheumatism is quite unbearable.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Laxative Medicine.

Perhaps no one medicine is so universally required by everybody as a cathartic, nor was ever any before so universally adopted into use, in every country and among all classes, as the mild but efficient purgative Pills. The obvious reason is, that it is a more reliable and far more effectual remedy than any other. Those who have tried it, know that it cured them; those who have not, know that it cures their neighbors and friends, and all know that what it does once it does always—that it never fails through any fault or neglect of its composition. We have thousands upon thousands of certificates of their remarkable cures of the following complaints, but such as we are known in every neighborhood, and we need not publish them. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates; containing neither calomel or any deleterious drug, they may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar coating preserves them ever fresh and makes them pleasant to take, while being purely vegetable no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

They operate by their powerful influence on the internal viscera to purify the blood and stimulate it into healthy action—remove the obstructions of the stomach, bowels, liver, and other organs of the body, restoring their irregular action to health, and by correcting, wherever they exist, such derangements as are the first origin of disease.

Minute directions are given in the wrapper on the best, for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaints and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for such cases, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Pulpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression a large dose should be taken as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels into healthy action, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous where no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

Probably never before in the whole history of medicine, has anything won so widely and so deeply upon the confidence of mankind, as this excellent remedy for pulmonary complaints. Through a long series of years, and among most of the races of men it has risen higher and higher in the estimation, as it has become better known. Its uniform character and power to cure the various affections of the lungs and throat, have made it known as a reliable protector against them. While adapted to milder forms of disease and to young children, it is at the same time the most effectual remedy that can be given for incipient consumption, and the dangerous affections of the throat and lungs. As a provision against sudden attacks of Croup, it should be kept on hand in every family, and indeed as all are sometimes subject to colds and coughs, all should be provided with this antidote for them.

Although settled Consumption is thought incurable, still great numbers of cases where the disease seemed settled, have been completely cured, and the patient restored to sound health by the Cherry Pectoral. So complete is its mastery over the disorders of the Lungs and Throat, that the most obstinate of them yield to it. When nothing else could reach them, under the Cherry Pectoral they subside and disappear.

Singers and Public Speakers find great protection from it.

Asthma is always relieved and often wholly cured by it.

Bronchitis is generally cured by taking the Cherry Pectoral in small and frequent doses.

So generally are its virtues known that we need not publish the certificates of them here, or do more than assure the public that its qualities are fully maintained.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

For Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons.

As its name implies, it does Cure, and does not sit. Containing neither Arsenic, Quinine, Bismuth, Zinc, nor any other mineral or poisonous substance whatever, it in nowise injures any patient. The number and importance of its cures in the ague districts, are literally beyond account, and we believe without a parallel in the history of Ague medicine. Our pride is gratified by the acknowledgments we receive of the radical cures effected in obstinate cases, and where other remedies had wholly failed. Unacclimated persons, either resident in, or travelling through miasmatic localities, will be protected by taking the AGUE CURE daily.

For Liver Complaints, arising from torpidity of the Liver, it is an excellent remedy, stimulating the Liver to healthy activity.

For Bilious Disorders and Liver Complaints, it is an excellent remedy, producing many truly remarkable cures, where other medicines had failed.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all the world.

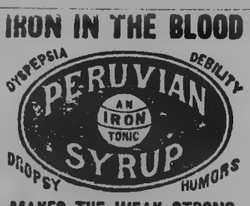
IRON IN THE BLOOD



MAKES THE WEAK STRONG.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and carries "a thousand lbs." simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energising effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.
